ANNUAL REPORT FOR THE YEAR 1973

I. INTRODUCTION

1973 was the first year of the new triennium. It opened on a fairly optimistic note, in the light of the recurrent and capital grants which the A.U.C. had recommended in its Fifth Report. Unfortunately, the optimism could not be entirely sustained; as a result of continued inflation at an ever-increasing rate, it rapidly became clear that it would be impossible without supplementary assistance to carry out in full the academic activities and building plans which the University had in mind for the triennium.

A considerable amount of time was spent by the University officers and by members of a number of committees in drawing up the University's Submission to the A.U.C. for the next triennium (1976-78). This was completed and forwarded to the A.U.C. at the end of the year.

During the year, the five-year term of office of the Honourable J. J. Bray, LL.D. as Chancellor of the University came to an end, and the Council unanimously re-elected him as Chancellor for a further term of five years.

2. THE COUNCIL AND THE SENATE

At the commencement of the new State Parliament in June 1973, the following five parliamentary members were appointed to the Council:

Mr. D. C. Brown, M.P.
The Hon. B. A. Chatterton, M.L.C.
Mr. P. J. Duncan, M.P.
The Hon. F. J. Potter, M.L.C.
Mr. D. W. Simmons, M.P.

The first three took the places of Mr. E. R. Goldsworthy, the Hon. A. F. Kneebone and Mr. T. M. McRae who retired from the Council.

In October, in accordance with the provisions of The University of Adelaide Act 1971-72, Mr. F. C. Graham and Mr. D. M. Johnson retired as members of the Council. They were the first undergraduate members to have been elected, under the Act, by the undergraduates. To replace them the undergraduates elected Mr. M. J. Evans and Mr. R. J. McGowan.

In November the following six members retired, in the categories shown:

Two members of the academic staff: Professor D. O. Jordan and Dr. G. M. E. Mayo.

Three persons not engaged in the employment of the University:

Mr. W. J. Bentley, Mr. W. R. Crocker and Mr. Justice S. J. Jacobs.

One postgraduate student of the University: Mrs. S. M. Williams.

The Convocation of Electors re-elected the first five members, in the categories shown; and in place of Mrs. Williams, who did not offer herself for re-election, it elected Mr. W. D. Gould.

During the year, Mr. W. R. Crocker was appointed Lieutenant Governor of South Australia, and Mr. S. J. Jacobs, Q.C., was appointed a Judge of the Supreme Court of South Australia.

At its meeting in November the Senate re-elected Mr. W. M. Rogers as its Warden and Mr. H. E. Wesley Smith as its Clerk. The five vacancies on the Standing Committee were filled by the election of Mr. R. S. Coggins, Mr. O. G. Jones, Dr. H. Lander, Mr. A. F. Twartz and Mr. D. F. Wicks.

3. STAFF

(a) Deaths:

The Council records with deep regret the death on 22 February 1973 of Dr. J. V. Peters, Reader in Music. Dr. Peters, who joined the staff of the University in 1953, was an organist of distinction and was appointed Organist of the City of Adelaide in 1967. His compositions included works for the University of Adelaide Wind Quintet and for the Adelaide Brass Ensemble, and a symphony dedicated to the Elder Conservatorium's Senior Orchestra.

(b) Retirements:

Professor C. M. Donald, who had been the Waite Professor of Agriculture in the Department of Agronomy since 1954, retired in March 1973.

Mr. V. A. Edgeloe retired from the office of Registrar on 31 March 1973. He had served the University since 1927 and had been Registrar since 1955.

The following members of staff retired at the end of the year:

Dr. J. Melville, who had been Director of the Waite Agricultural Research Institute since 1956; Professor H. H. Davis, who was appointed to the Foundation Chair of Mechanical Engineering in April 1946; Professor T. G. H. Strehlow, who was appointed to a Readership in Australian Linguistics in 1954 (he had been a Senior Research Fellow since 1946) and to a Personal Chair in 1970; Miss Nancy Thomas, who had been Teacher of Singing in the Elder Conservatorium of Music since 1962.

Following their retirements, the title of Professor Emeritus was conferred on Professors Davis, Donald and Strehlow, the title of Director Emeritus on Dr. Melville, and the title of Registrar Emeritus on Mr. Edgeloe.

(c) Resignations:

Dr. A. D. Packer, Reader in Anatomy and Histology; Professor J. L. Woodward, Professor of Electrical Engineering, on appointment as Professor of Electrical and Mechanical Engineering at the Papua and New Guinea Institute of Technology; Professor D. R. Stranks, Professor of Physical and Inorganic Chemistry, on appointment to the Chair of Inorganic Chemistry at the University of Melbourne; Mr. I. Hanna, Senior Lecturer in Adult Education, on appointment as Head of the Department of General Studies at the Prahran College of Technology, Melbourne; Mr. D. Cubbin, Senior Lecturer in Music, on appointment as Music Development Officer with the Department of Further Education in South Australia; Dr. K. L. O. Gillon, Reader in History;

Dr. V. S. Chitre, Lecturer in Economics; Mr. P. J. Corkery, Senior Lecturer in Architecture, on appointment as Principal Lecturer in Architecture at the School of Environmental Design, Canberra College of Advanced Education; Dr. A. C. W. Mitchell, Lecturer in English.

(d) New Appointments:

The appointment of the following members of staff took effect during the year:

Professors: Dr. R. E. Bogner, previously Lecturer at the Imperial College of Science and Technology, University of London, to a Chair in Electrical Engineering; Dr. M. I. Bruce, previously Lecturer at the University of Bristol, to a Chair in Physical and Inorganic Chemistry; Dr. B. Kapferer, previously Lecturer at the University of Manchester, to the new Chair of Anthropology; Dr. I. D. John, previously Reader in Psychology, to a Chair in Psychology.

Readers: Dr. R. Chynoweth, Psychiatry; Mr. B. J. McFarlane, Politics; Dr. T. G. C. Murrell, Community Medicine; Dr. J. Robertson-Rintoul, Anatomy and Histology; Dr. G. C. Scroop, Human Physiology and Pharmacology; Dr. A. R. Stephens, German.

Senior Lecturers: Dr. W. C. Hall, Director of the Advisory Centre for University Education; Dr. D. M. Harman, Architecture; Dr. C. Turner, Law.

Lecturers: Mr. R. J. Aird, Mechanical Engineering; Dr. S. Barker, Geography; Dr. W. G. Breen, Anatomy; Mr. D. E. Brooks, Animal Physiology; Mr. Z. Bruderhans, Music; Mr. R. J. Bullen, Law; Mr. D. C. Christophel, Botany; Dr. D. L. Clements, Applied Mathematics; Dr. D. J. Cocks, Chemical Engineering; Dr. Margaret E. Dean, Paediatrics; Dr. Barbara J. Dennis, Human Physiology and Pharmacology; Dr. A. R. Dexter, Agricultural Biochemistry and Soil Science; Mr. N. J. Hunter, Politics; Mr. Z. Kapelis, Architecture; Mr. P. D. Moss, Education; Dr. K. E. Moxham, Civil Engineering; Mr. P. F. Nursey-Bray, Politics; Mr. B. K. O'Neill, Chemical Engineering; Dr. Marilyn V. Peay, Psychiatry; Dr. D. L. Parrott, Pure Mathematics; Dr. A. Perry, Law; Dr. B. F. Sherman, Education; Dr. P. M. Young, Anatomy; Dr. M. Zockel, Mechanical Engineering.

Registrar: Mr. A. E. Shields, previously Registrar of the University of Sussex.

(e) Distinctions:

Professors A. T. Welford and E. A. Russell and Mr. H. Stretton were elected Fellows of the Academy of the Social Sciences in Australia. Professor A. L. J. Beckwith and Dr. J. H. Michael were elected Fellows of the Australian Academy of Science. Professor T. G. Wilson was elected a Fellow of the Australian Academy of the Humanities. Dr. F. J. Jacka was elected President of the Australian Institute of Physics. Professor A. T. Welford was elected President of the Ergonomics Society of Australia and New Zealand.

4. CONDITIONS OF SERVICE OF STAFF

The salaries of academic staff were substantially increased as from the beginning of the academic year, as a result of the recommendations made by Mr. Justice Campbell in his Report of May 1973.

Academic staff (along with all other staff) also benefited from the revision of the National Wage in June 1973.

Salaries of the various categories of the non-academic staff were also revised at different times during the year, depending on the movement of salaries of corresponding staff in the South Australian Public Service and in industry.

A major development in respect of the ancillary staff (i.e. all staff other than the academic staff and professional officers) was the registration with the South Australian Industrial Commission of an Industrial Agreement between the University and the Ancillary Staff Association.

Following an application by the Miscellaneous Workers' Union, the South Australian Industrial Court ruled that the Industrial Commission had no jurisdiction to make awards relating to the staff of the University.

The Council agreed that the superannuation provisions of ancillary staff would be brought into line with those of academic and related staff, although the process would be spread over some years.

5. ORGANISATION

The discussions on a scheme of Departmental Government, which had been going on for three or four years, were finally concluded in October 1973. The scheme which was adopted includes the following provisions:

- (1) A meeting of the full-time tenurable members of the academic staff of each Department should be held to decide
 - (a) whether a formal Departmental Committee should be set up for that Department, and
 - (b) if so, what the constitution of the Committee should be.
- (2) If such a Committee is set up, its function will be to advise the Head of the Department on all matters concerning the policy and administration of the Department, but the final decisions on these matters will continue to be the responsibility of the Head of the Department.
- (3) In the case of all Departments where the Headship has changed since 1969 (when discussions on the scheme commenced), the Head will in future be known as the Chairman of the Department and will be elected for periods of three years at a time by the tenurable members of staff of the Department. A Deputy Chairman should also be elected. Heads of Departments who were appointed before 1969 (and who therefore have a contractual right to remain as such) may elect to retain or to give up their contractual right.
- (4) Faculty Appointment Committees which are set up to make recommendations to the Council on appointments to Lectureships, Senior Lectureships and Readerships will in future contain the Chairmen of all Departments in the Faculty as well as another member of the staff of each Department elected by the Departmental Committee.

Following the implementation of the new scheme, 37 Departments formally set up Departmental Committees, 8 Departments decided not to have formal Committees, and (as at 30 June 1974) 8 Departments had still to decide.

For the first time, the University Council appointed a standing Planning Committee whose function is to plan the future development of the University, and in particular to prepare the University's triennial Submission to the A.U.C. The Committee consists of 14 members—3 ex officio, 6 members of the academic staff, 3 students and 2 others; and a new senior post has been created on the Registrar's staff to provide full-time secretarial and administrative assistance for the Committee. Most of the Committee's time during 1973 was spent on the University's Submission to the A.U.C. for the 1976-78 triennium.

6. ACADEMIC MATTERS

The new Chair of Anthropology was filled towards the end of 1973 and teaching in the new Department was planned to begin in 1974.

The new Advisory Centre for University Education began its operations in 1973. Its functions are to help improve the effectiveness of teaching by offering advice on aspects of teaching and learning; to study matters relating to higher education; to conduct curriculum research; and to provide a full technical service of audio-visual materials.

A decision was taken to set up an inter-disciplinary Centre for Asian Studies which will co-ordinate Asian Studies at present being undertaken in various departments, and also new courses to be introduced in the Chinese and Japanese languages.

The introduction of the following new courses was approved:

- (1) Honours degree of Bachelor of Science in Dentistry.
- (2) Diploma in Business Management.
- (3) Diploma in Clinical Science.
- (4) Diploma in Library Studies.

In regard to the new course for the Diploma in Library Studies, the Council agreed, at the request of the S.A. Minister of Education, to the establishment of a joint advisory committee representing both the University and the Institute of Technology, the function of which would be to make recommendations to both institutions on the future development of specialised library courses and the sharing of facilities.

Discussions were in progress during the year in regard to the possibility of an amalgamation between the University and the Adelaide College of Advanced Education.

7. BUILDINGS

1973 saw the commencement of the building programme for the triennium 1973-75. Once again the major project has been the development of a further stage of the Library Complex building. To enable this to be built it was necessary to demolish the Prince of Wales building which had formed part of the University scene since the early 1900's, but which had now become quite unsuited to its purpose and structurally unsound. The new buildings forming Stage III of the project were intended to provide new accommodation and, in some instances, major expansion for the Departments of Music and Psychology, and the Administration, and minor expansion for the Library and the Department of Adult Education. The Department of Anthropology, the Centre for Asian Studies and the Advisory Centre for University Education were also to be located in one of the new buildings. This project was due to be completed by June 1974.

Other projects included further extensions and alterations to the Union Buildings to provide additional refectory, shopping and cultural facilities, thus completing the redesign of the Union for the present; extensions to the Physical Education Centre to replace the very old and unsatisfactory male change room; and a major extension of the Mawson Laboratories building providing further research and teaching facilities.

A start has been made upon the major task of rehabilitating older University buildings which it is expected will take several triennia to complete, and which has not been possible on the scale necessary whilst major new developments have demanded so much of the University's resources. The Medical School and the Engineering buildings are now being altered and renovated to meet present day requirements and to replace many of the outworn and inadequate facilities. A new Small Animals House is under construction at the Waite Agricultural Research Institute and a beginning is to be made to renovate the southern wing of the main building following the transfer of the student teaching laboratories into the new building provided for this purpose in 1972.

The University has embarked upon a major Site Development Study, the first stage of which was prepared in 1973. Its ultimate purpose is to determine the extent of physical development which may be permitted within the present University grounds, and in consultation with adjoining institutions and the City of Adelaide to ensure that the design of the University environment is in harmony with and is related to the overall concept of development proposed for the whole North Terrace area. With these objectives in mind, the University made a major submission to the City of Adelaide Development Committee concerning the area between North Terrace and the River Torrens proposing, amongst other things, the closure of Victoria Drive to all but emergency traffic, and the opening of the University grounds to the general public by removal of fences and redesign of boundary areas.

The future of the Elder Hall was discussed at length during the year. A study of the requirements of the Music Department revealed that they could not be fully satisfied without extensive alterations and additions to the present premises; at the same time, the Department was finding the facilities of the Elder Hall increasingly unsatisfactory for practical music performances. Following an investigation by a local firm of architects and by a committee which invited submissions from both inside and outside the University, the Council decided that the most satisfactory solution would be to demolish the Elder Hall and replace it by a new Music School and Concert Hall. This decision, however, led to a number of public protests, and the Senate passed a resolution asking the Council to preserve the Elder Hall. At the end of the year the final answer to the Music Department's problems was still uncertain.

8. FINANCIAL MATTERS

Inflation with a severity not hitherto experienced continued to be a real problem in 1973 and it was again necessary for the University to exercise economies in revenue expenditure in an endeavour to limit excesses of expenditure over income to an acceptable level, having regard to funds available for the triennium 1973-75. A revenue deficit of $179,000 was nevertheless incurred and when added to the deficit of $125,000 incurred in the previous triennium, resulted in an accumulated deficit of $304,000 at the end of 1973 which is a first charge against the funds available to the University in 1974 and 1975, the remaining years of the current triennium. The seriousness of the necessity, to deficit budget cannot be too greatly emphasised and results almost entirely from the cost escalation in salaries and wages of non-academic staff and to a lesser degree increases in the cost of other non-wage items at levels substantially higher than those experienced in 1972. The Australian Universities Commission has intimated that supplementary grants, subject to quarterly review to meet cost escalation of non-academic salaries, National Wage and other non-wage items, according to a formula based on national indices, will be made to the University during 1974 and 1975, but will, however, apply only with respect to those years. A downturn in the rate of inflation seems unlikely in the short term and it is not envisaged that the overall availability of funds to the University will show marked improvement during 1974.

9. GIFTS AND BEQUESTS

The Council acknowledges with gratitude the following gifts and bequests received during 1973:

$18,340 from the Estate of Mrs. D. I. A. Moore for the Anti-Cancer Foundation; $11,287 from the Estate of Miss A. L. Tapp for the establishment of prizes in History, Physiology and Mathematics; $2,892 from the Estate of Mrs. B. Price for the Anti-Cancer Foundation; $266,942 from the Estate of Mrs. E. S. Everard to establish the Charles John Everard scholarships in Agricultural or Horticultural Science; $5,539 from the Estate of Mrs. E. M. Hansford for the Anti-Cancer Foundation; $3,788 from the Estate of Mrs. F. E. Anthony for medical research; $83,683 from the Estate of Mrs. R. M. L. Gummow for the Anti-Cancer Foundation; $2,350 from the family of Lady Kitty Pauline Price for the Pauline Price scholarship; $4,299 from the Estate of S. Grigg for the Anti-Cancer Foundation; $30,000 from an anonymous donor for the Medical School; and $5,000 from Miss E. Parker for the Anti-Cancer Foundation.

10. RESEARCH

Members of staff received grants totalling $553,095 from the Australian Research Grants Committee for 1973. This amount represented 10.6% of the total awarded to universities and research institutes in Australia. Grants to members of staff were distributed as follows:

| | $ |
|--|---------|
| 7 projects in the Humanities and Social Sciences | 21,371 |
| 10 projects in the Physical Sciences | 73,206 |
| 25 projects in the Chemical Sciences | 144,671 |
| 42 projects in the Biological Sciences | 230,416 |
| 8 projects in the Earth Sciences | 34,950 |
| 9 projects in the Engineering and Applied Sciences | 48,481 |

There were also three special purpose grants totalling $40,112. The largest grant for a single project was $27,790 to Dr. J. R. Urwin (Physical and Inorganic Chemistry).

The National Health and Medical Research Council awarded 25 grants totalling $114,107 for projects concerned with medical research; and scholarships for 5 medical and dental postgraduate research scholars.

The Reserve Bank awarded grants totalling $111,108 under the Rural Credits Development Fund Scheme to support research and extension projects designed to benefit primary industry.

The Research Executive Committee in 1973 had $1,038,000 (including a special equipment grant of $160,000) available to it for the general support of research by staff members and the training of postgraduate students. The number of postgraduate scholars receiving stipends from the University Research Grant was 132 (including 30 scholars whose tenure of awards was six months or less); the corresponding numbers were 144 and 49 in 1972.

A number of individual grants from other organisations were made to members of staff. The Commonwealth Commission of Enquiry into Poverty awarded grants of $9,950 to Dr. T. G. C. Murrell, $7,000 to Dr. Fay Gale and $10,250 to Mr. D. St.L. Kelly. The C.S.I.R.O. made a grant of $7,000 for a project under the direction of Professor J. R. Prescott.

11. THE BARR SMITH LIBRARY

Holdings at the end of 1973 were as follows: central library 544,498 volumes; law library 36,226; medical library 71,707; music library 2,426 (and 11,960 pieces of music in sheets); and the Waite Agricultural Research Institute library 29,127; making total holdings of 695,944 volumes in printed form. In addition, the library held the equivalent of 51,777 volumes in microform.

During 1973 the Library made 271,424 extramural loans to students, staff and graduates; 18,028 to other libraries in South Australia; and 6,069 to libraries in other States and countries. Volumes lent for use within the Library included 103,527 from the reserve collection and 4,869 from the Special Collections Section. The Library received 2,088 loans from other libraries. Accessions totalled 32,527 volumes and the equivalent of 1,826 volumes in microform, while withdrawals numbered 494 volumes. Serial titles received numbered 18,012. Expenditure on staff, books, serials and binding and for other library purposes amounted to $1,114,000, or 6.2% of total University expenditure.

Many gifts of books were received from members of the University community and other citizens.

The State Library of South Australia and the Library of the Supreme Court of South Australia presented valuable sets of publications.

A vessel used by Lord Florey in the production of the first clinical penicillin was presented to the University by his biographer, Mr. Lennard Bickel, and placed in the Library. To supplement this gift F. H. Faulding and Co. Ltd. prepared and donated to the Library an exhibit on the early manufacture of penicillin.

To enable the Library to increase its use of applications of computing science a systems analyst/programmer was appointed. Several projects of long standing were improved, and major attention was given to the design and development of an advanced on-line loan system intended for introduction in 1975.

The Deputy Librarian carried out a review of the staff organisation of the Library and presented a detailed report which included proposals for important changes in the staff structure. The Library Committee then made recommendations, which the Council accepted, for the early introduction of a technical grade between the existing grades of clerical assistant and professional officer, and for the establishment of a post of Training Librarian to make possible the systematic development of in-service training.

Library staff were enabled to participate more actively in decision-making through changes in the Library's internal committee system and through the Council's decision that the library staff should be permitted to elect three of their number to the Library Committee.

12. STATUTES AND REGULATIONS

A number of statutes and regulations were repealed or amended, and new regulations were made, as follows:

Statutes:

Chapter III—Of the Senate; Chapter IV—Of the Academic Staff; Chapter IX—Of Matriculation; and Chapter X—Of the Faculties, were amended.

Chapter XXVII—Of Diplomas and their Boards of Studies; and Chapter LIX—Of the R. W. Bennett Prizes and Medal, were repealed.

Regulations:

Regulations were made to govern the new courses for the Honours degree of B.Sc. in Dentistry, and for Diplomas in Business Management, Clinical Science, and Library Studies.

Amendments were made to the Regulations governing the degrees of B.Ag.Sc., B.D.S., LL.B., B.Sc., M.Ag.Sc., M.Arch., M.B.M., M.D.S., M.Econ., M.Ed., LL.M., M.Sc., and D.Sc., and the diplomas in Applied Psychology, Computing Science and Education.

13. STATISTICS

Numbers of Students: The total number of students was 8,936, an increase of 147 on the enrolment of the previous year. Higher Degree enrolments continued to rise attaining a record level of 972.

The tendency towards a greater proportion of full-time enrolments was continued in 1973 when these enrolments represented 68·3% of the total, or, excluding the Elder Conservatorium of Music 70%.

| | Males | Females | Total | % |
|----------------------------|--------------|--------------|--------------|--------------|
| Full-time | 4,285 | 1,815 | 6,100 | 68·3 |
| Other | 1,797 | 834 | 2,631 | 29·4 |
| Elder Conservatorium .. . | 91 | 114 | 205 | 2·3 |
| Total Students .. . | 6,173 | 2,763 | 8,936 | 100·0 |

Distribution into Courses:

Each student is counted once only—in the category appropriate to his principal course. The figures in brackets refer to the number of females included in the totals.

Evening Lectures: Evening lectures were given in the following subjects: American Literature, Accounting Theory IIIH, Biology I, Commercial Law II, Comparative Philology III, Computing Science III and IIIA, Economic Development III, Economic Statistics II and IIA, Economics I, Elements of Accounting (B), Economic Geography I, Economics II, English I and II, French II, General Geology IH, Geography I, German II, History IA, IB, II, IIIA and IIIB, Industrial Sociology III, Information Systems and Data Processing IIIH, Managerial Economics IIIH, Music I, II and III, Philosophy I, II, IIIA and IIIB, Physical Geology IH, Physics I, Politics IIA, IIB and IIIA, Psychology I, II and III, Public Finance IIIH.

Student Health Service: The total number of individual services rendered during the year was 11,842, including 1,887 routine medical examinations of students, 2,281 casualties, 2,049 return visits from casualty service, 1,806 poliomyelitis immunisations, 335 tetanus prophylactic injections, and 1,992 Mantoux tests. The total does not include Chest X-rays arranged by the Service at the City X-ray Unit.

Of the 2,281 casualties, 1,779 were illnesses, 412 accidents and 90 sports injuries.

Student Counselling Service: Recorded individual counselling discussions, typically of one hour duration on each occasion, were conducted with 545 students of all faculties and years, both undergraduate and postgraduate. The difficulties for which assistance was sought ranged widely throughout educational, vocational and personal matters, often in combination, and always in uniquely individual circumstances. Of the students seen, 365 returned for further interviews within a range of 2-50 consultations. Recorded individual visits to the Service totalled 1,465, requiring 1,367 hours of staff time in personal interviewing. Numerous brief consultations at the Counselling Centre and informal contacts with students on campus and elsewhere extended the impact of the Counselling Service but were not recorded and cannot be reported statistically. Group activities to foster socialisation and personal development were conducted throughout the year, the largest number of separate groups in any one month reaching 9 with an enrolment of 96 students. In all, 173 group meetings ranging from 1-12 hours duration were conducted, involving a total of 156 students and requiring 418 hours of staff time. Throughout the academic year counsellors participated in a wide variety of staff and student affairs, and in community activities relevant to tertiary education.

15. ADULT EDUCATION

1973 was a successful year for the Department of Adult Education, as is indicated by the following statistical summary. Full details appear in the Department's Annual Report for 1973.

Seminars and Conferences: Seventeen schools, seminars and conferences were arranged by the Department, mainly at the University, with a total enrolment of 1,387. These courses varied in length and content, e.g. the Pitjantjatjara Intensive Language course (19 days), the Health Debate (3 days), the Future of the Coorong (2 days).

Residential Courses: Included in the above total of schools and seminars were the one week Summer School of Art, two foreign language weekend schools and the five-day Industrial Relations School (with the Australian Council of Salaried and Professional Organisations and the W.E.A. of South Australia), all of which were in residence at Graham's Castle residential college, Goolwa, S.A.

Classes: The Department conducted 44 weekly classes, mainly in the evening at the University, of which foreign languages accounted for 24, Science 7 and the Humanities 13 classes. The total enrolments for these classes numbered 1,399.

Extension Courses: Nineteen extension courses for professional people were offered on such subjects as Noise Control, Economics for Other Professions, Law for Engineers, and subjects for the Registration Examination of the Library Association of Australia. The enrolment in these courses was 1,034.

Discussion Groups: Seven groups met in metropolitan and rural centres for discussion group courses in Psychology, Philosophy, Comparative Religion and Literature. Total group membership was 65.

Publications: During 1973 the Department published two books of the proceedings of seminars; and other seminars provided papers for the main articles in Issue (a quarterly journal published jointly by the Department and the Workers' Educational Association of S.A.). In addition, two other books were published, The Vision Splendid (Professor W. G. K. Duncan's 1944 Report on Adult Education in Australia, with commentaries), and Yorke Peninsula—A Natural History.

Educational Radio Station: As reported last year, an anonymous donation of $100,000 allowed the Department to establish an educational radio station (VL5UV) in June 1972. The identity of the donor (Mr. K. G. Stirling) was publicly revealed, following his untimely death in November 1973 at the comparatively young age of 38. 1,525 people enrolled for seventeen systematic courses, some in subjects of general interest, e.g. Conversational German, Literature for Children, The Urban Aborigine, as well as others for educational and professional groups, e.g. Colour Television, Nursing and Pharmacy.

During the year, the lifting of the restriction on the playing of incidental music on VL5UV and the modification of the filter requirement on transmissions have broadened the scope of programming and improved the quality of broadcasts. The Department intends to take advantage of these changes to obtain greater flexibility in the use of radio as an integral part of its activities.

16. APPOINTMENTS BOARD

Among the services provided by the Secretary of the Board during the year were the following:

1,200 campus interviews were arranged between final year students and 40 employers. Copies of the Graduate Careers Directory, with information on many employers, were sent to 1,600 graduands.

Close liaison was maintained with the Professional Employment Service of the Department of Labour which provides a special placement service on campus for graduands.

The fourth annual survey of the first employment of graduates was also carried out and the figures incorporated in an Australia-wide survey by the Graduate Careers Council of Australia with the support of the A.U.C.

50,000 copies of the broadsheet "Careers and Courses in South Australia" were produced by the Board in co-operation with the Youth Employment Service of the Department of Labour and distributed to each school leaver and third year student in the State. It contains systematic information on 400 careers and 70 South Australian employers, and an outline of the courses in the State.

17. THE UNIVERSITY UNION

At the beginning of 1973, the Union's new Constitution came into effect. This provides for individual membership for all students and staff and a quota of graduates. The Union Council (its governing body) has now 15 fully elected members, and 3 non-voting ex officio members. In the old Council, the members were representatives of different sectional groups.

After elections in July, the inaugural meeting of the new Council, including for the first time some members of the Union staff, was held in August. Dr. E. H. Medlin, a long-time member of the Union Council, was elected Chairman.

The first stage of the Union's Major Redevelopment Programme was completed in 1971. The second stage began in March 1973. During the year, industrial troubles, shortage of materials and inflation resulted in significant increases in the expected cost of the building and by the end of the year the project was three months behind schedule.

This delay put increased pressure on the already overloaded refectories. The major problems were shortage of space, inadequate delivery arrangements and increasing difficulty in obtaining staff. Increasing costs were a constant worry, but the Union tried to keep its prices down. The result was an inevitable financial loss.

The Union's Bookshop Manager, Miss Ethel Payne, died in August after a long illness. A new Manager, Mr. R. Amundsen, was appointed to take up duty early in 1974. The Union also appointed a full-time Theatre Manager, Mr. C. Edelman, who was also expected to take up duty early in 1974.

The Union Hall was fully utilised during 1973, with a series of very successful seasons by the South Australian Theatre Company. There were also successful productions by the Theatre Guild, Dramatic Society, and Footlights, and popular film screenings arranged by the Film Group.

In the past, the Union had agreed that the Statutory Union Fee should be increased significantly only when new sections of the building became available for general use. Accordingly, it had put off requesting the University Council to increase the Union Fee for 1973, but it was agreed that the Fee should be substantially increased in 1974.

The Union traditionally has avoided much activity outside the University. However, for some years there has been increasing interest in community affairs generally. During 1973 the Union actively supported the acquisition by the University of a large house in the south-east of the City, for use as a community centre particularly for the under-privileged children in the area. The centre is run by the South-East Corner Community Development Group, which is part of Social Action, a voluntary student body concerned with education and welfare in the wider community. The Group has made a successful submission for the establishment of an alternative school in the area, to begin teaching in 1974. Members of the Group have also been active in local government affairs and have produced a Tenants' Rights Handbook.

The Union also took an interest in the City of Adelaide Development Plan, making a detailed submission covering a wide range of topics, including a two-year college in the City, the closure of Victoria Drive, and housing for all classes of tertiary students.

18. STUDENT MATTERS

The A.U.C.'s Fifth Report gave approval to a proposal by the University to provide relatively cheap residential accommodation for students of the University, and made available a grant-in-aid of $180,000 to make possible the construction of such accommodation for 73 students during the triennium 1973-75. The Council appointed a Board of Management for Non-Collegiate Housing and charged it with the duty of planning and managing this accommodation. It also put at the disposal of the Board 8 residential properties owned by the University in North Adelaide in order to enable it to provide some accommodation for students before the new scheme was ready. This accommodation has proved very popular with students, who have shown an increasing desire to live close to the University in communal houses and flats. During the year the Board, which has both staff and tenants as members, has discussed with the Council the details of its terms of reference and has been making progress with the planning of the new accommodation.

At the beginning of 1973, the Commonwealth Government put the sum of $146,000 at the disposal of the University to enable it to make grants and loans to needy students. From this fund the University was able to assist some 200 students to meet their immediate financial problems. A total of about $70,000 was granted or lent during the year; the remainder, together with loans repaid, is available for use in future years. This assistance, together with the decision of the Commonwealth Government to abolish University fees and to make generous tertiary allowances available from 1974, should ensure that very few students in future suffer financial hardship.

19. MISCELLANEOUS

As part of its plans to celebrate its Centenary in 1974, the University published late in 1973 a History of the University written by R. A. Leonard and W. G. K. Duncan. Preparations were well in hand at the end of the year for the Celebrations, which were to be inaugurated by H.M. the Queen in March and to culminate in August when official delegates from Universities throughout the world were expected to present their greetings and take part in the festivities.

To mark the Centenary, a major Appeal for Funds is to be launched and preparations for this also were well advanced at the end of the year.

The Music Department continued to provide many high quality performances open to the public of Adelaide. At lunch time on Tuesdays and Thursdays during term time free concerts are arranged, those on Tuesdays being largely performed by students and those on Thursdays by members of staff and visitors. The Wind Quintet made an extensive and highly successful international tour which included 59 recitals, lectures and workshop sessions in the U.S.A., England, Switzerland, Korea, Malaysia, Singapore and Indonesia over a period of four months. Mr. R. G. Meale, Senior Lecturer in Music, was appointed to a Senior Composition Fellowship awarded by the South Australian Government for a period of three years.

Among visitors to the University during 1973 were Mr. N. K. Vakil (Vice-Chancellor of the University of Baroda), Professor Sir Michael Woodruff (Edinburgh University), Dr. H. A. O. Hill (Oxford University), Professor Ronald Belcher (Birmingham University), Professor A. N. Sherbourne (Waterloo University), Professor J. Hermand (Wisconsin University), Dr. E. L. Breese (Welsh Plant Breeding Station), Professor A. O. Adekola (Lagos University), Mr. F. J. O. Ryan (N.S.W. Commissioner of Corporate Affairs), Professor J. N. Kapur (Vice-Chancellor of Meerut University), Sir Edgar Williams (Warden of Rhodes House, Oxford), Professor Y. Belaval (Paris University), Professor E. Penrose (London University) and Professor C. M. Williams (Harvard University).

20. FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

An abstract of the income and expenditure of the University during 1973 is annexed to this Report, together with a further statement showing the actual position of the University with respect to its property, funds and liabilities at the close of 1973.

Signed on behalf of the Council,

Adelaide,

27 September, 1974.

ROMA F. MITCHELL,

Deputy Chancellor.

CENTENARY ORATION

At a ceremony held in the Festival Theatre on 2 March 1974, His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh was admitted ad eundem gradum to the Degree of Doctor of Science in The University of Adelaide.

In presenting His Royal Highness for the Degree the Dean of the Faculty of Science, Professor R. W. R. Rutland read the following Citation.

Mr. Chancellor, Mr. Vice-Chancellor, Members of the Council and Senate of The University of Adelaide.

It has been said that 'man's destiny is to be responsible for the whole future of the evolutionary process of this planet'.

In the exercise of this responsibility the progress and application of science must be regarded as of critical importance; yet there has been a danger that scientists and scientific research might become isolated from, and perhaps indifferent to, their effects upon the community which they should serve.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh has taken a special interest in science and in its place in the social structure. He has recognised that the problems created by scientific discoveries and their exploitation are of the greatest importance to society and that scientific effort must be re-deployed to aid their solution. He has successfully contributed to the task of putting the possible consequences of scientific research before the forum of ordinary people. 'Only in this way', he once said, 'can the combined opinion of reasonable upright and humane men and women throughout the world exert the necessary pressure that science is used to set free and not to enslave mankind'.

In this matter, as in so many others, Prince Philip has given dedicated service; and his Presidency of the British Association for the Advancement of Science in 1951, his several Commonwealth Study Conferences, and his Presidency of the Australian Conservation Foundation have been of particular importance in achieving his aims.

In his Address to the Third Commonwealth Study Conference, on the Human Problems of Industrial Development and Re-development in Commonwealth Countries, held in Australia in 1968, His Royal Highness drew attention to the need for people who are thoroughly aware of the human situation, who can appreciate and understand the progressively powerful influence which technology is exerting on human affairs, and who understand the constant need to adjust development to the needs of human existence. Through his efforts, here and elsewhere, and through his example, this need may yet be met.

Prince Philip has been an active President of the Australian Conservation Foundation. He has been concerned to change current attitudes and practices if these are contrary to good conservation principles; he has stimulated discussion; and he has given leadership and encouragement to those striving to preserve the quality of the environment.

In all these matters Prince Philip's views have had a wide impact, partly because of his interests in, and contacts with, the innumerable facets of life in the British Commonwealth and partly, perhaps, because as he himself has said, he has had rather exceptional opportunities to see what is going on and because he has 'no axe to grind and nothing to sell'.

Honours and distinctions have crowded on His Royal Highness from many parts of the world. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society and a Fellow of the Australian Academy of Science. Many universities have honoured him and in so doing have brought honour on themselves. He was admitted to the degree of Doctor of Laws in the University of Edinburgh in 1952 and he pointed out at that time that, by ancient custom, this entitled him to teach at any university in Christendom. He has also been admitted to the degree of Doctor of Laws in the Universities of Wales, London, Cambridge, Karachi, Malta and California, and to the degree of Doctor of Civil Laws in the Universities of Durham and Oxford.

Mr. Chancellor, it is with due appreciation of the honour that he does this University that I present to you His Royal Highness The Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh, Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Thistle, Order of Merit, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire, Privy Councillor, Chancellor of the Universities of Edinburgh and Wales, who has been admitted to the degree of Doctor of Science in the Universities of Delhi, Reading, Salford and Southampton, as a fit and proper person to be admitted to the rank and privileges of a Doctor of Science in The University of Adelaide.

R. W. R. RUTLAND,

Dean of the Faculty of Science.

Prince Philip then delivered the address that follows.

UNIVERSITIES AND THE DIFFUSION OF CULTURE

“Governor Hindmarsh arrived in the ‘Buffalo’ and proclaimed South Australia a Province at a ceremony under the Old Gum Tree at Glenelg on 28th December, 1836. Thirty-eight years later in 1874, which was the thirty-seventh year of the reign of Queen Victoria, the University of Adelaide was established by Act of Parliament.”

These words, with such a splendidly Old Testament ring about them, are from the opening paragraph in the booklet published to mark the centenary of the University. The booklet goes on to describe the circumstances which led up to this momentous decision, the personalities who were responsible for the idea and the discussions about the purpose and organisation of the University. With tact and becoming modesty, it traces its development and growth up to the present day.

It is an impressive record of achievement and I would like to add my congratulations and best wishes to the stream of similar messages which, I am sure, the University has received from all parts of the world.

I am naturally delighted and flattered to have been admitted to the Degree and although it has meant rather a lot of work, I am most honoured to be invited to address such a distinguished company on this occasion during the anniversary celebrations.

I suppose I should have prepared something about Adelaide University but as the centenary booklet gives such a comprehensive review of the heroes and achievements of the University, I came to the conclusion that there was little point in repeating it all again. In any case, I do not think that the arbitrary span of 100 years in the existence of the University is particularly significant. More important, I suggest, are the factors which were responsible for the foundation of the University, the influences on its development, and its own influence on our life and thought. We may have got used to the idea of Universities, but 100 years ago, when Australia had three universities, England only had four—Oxford, Cambridge, Durham and London—the latter two founded in 1832 and 1836. I should add that Scotland had four when England had only two. Today, Britain has forty-two universities and Australia has some twenty.

The intellectual atmosphere 100 years ago was bubbling with new ideas and here in Australia there was an enormous momentum for social and economic growth.

Darwin’s “Origin of Species” was published only fifteen years before the foundation of Adelaide University. Its reverberations not only transformed all the biological sciences, but constituted the greatest challenge to conventional thought which the world had experienced since the days of Copernicus and Newton. One can well imagine that the literate leaders of Australia’s population of two million in the second half of the 19th century and of Adelaide with its population of no more than 50,000, had few inhibitions in accepting the new teachings of the biological and physical sciences. It is interesting to think that only fourteen years before Adelaide founded a university,

T. H. Huxley was having his famous debate with Bishop Wilberforce about the acceptability of the Darwinian theory of evolution.

In the intellectual climate generated by the Australian universities there emerged men whose ideas were to transform all our thinking. Grafton Elliot Smith, a product of the Anatomy School of Sydney, became the most distinguished member of his profession anywhere in the world. Today he is remembered mainly for his anthropological work, and for his advocacy of the theory of the diffusion of culture.

Then from Adelaide, of course, there is Sir Mark Oliphant, educated in this University and then at Cambridge, a Fellow of the Royal Society and now Governor of this State who as one of the great Rutherford's—not an Australian but a New Zealander—outstanding collaborators, transformed physics and opened up the age of the atom. It would have been a different world too, if Oliphant's laboratory had not produced micro-wave radar during the early part of the Second World War.

In its hundred years, Adelaide University has not only contributed handsomely to the culture of the civilised world, it has also benefited from all the contributions made in other centres of learning. Clearly one reason why it was able to flourish as fast as it did was the fact that it shared a common language with the universities of the entire English speaking world. Another reason was that your university institutions were framed on the same pattern as those of other new English speaking universities. An Englishman or a Scotsman or a Welshman had no problem in fitting into your university, any more than it proved a problem for a Bragg or a Florey or an Oliphant to fit into a British university. Yet another, and very important reason, is that we have all shared the same high academic standards, standards which are maintained through the fact that scholars and scientists publish in the same learned journals, and enjoy the membership of the same learned institutions.

Adelaide University could not have developed and flourished in isolation from the rest of the learned world—and in its early days particularly in isolation from British academic institutions.

Miltons rarely blush unseen. Isolation is the enemy of culture. If Elliot Smith was over-emphatic in promulgating the view that all culture spreads by diffusion from some single source, he was certainly right in pointing to the fact that without diffusion, culture cannot spread.

That is why I have chosen to talk about 'Universities and the Diffusion of Culture'. I thought it might be interesting to speculate on the relationship between universities and our Western European culture which created them and to consider the influence of universities on our civilisation and the transmission of culture to succeeding generations.

Definition of Culture.

On the whole, I do not much appreciate titles which do not convey useful information. For instance, the title 'Portrait of a Man' under a picture is merely irritating. If you cannot see that it is a painting of a man it is hardly worth saying so, and if you can see that it is a man then it would be more helpful if the title said something to identify the man, whether by his race, occupation or, if all else fails, by his name.

In this case the title I have chosen means very little unless I start by indicating what I understand by the word culture.

According to Webster's Dictionary, there are several senses in which the word can be used, but for the purposes of this discussion I need only quote two of them:

1. "Culture is a particular stage of advancement in civilisation or the characteristic features of such stage or state" and
2. "Culture is the enlightenment and refinement of taste acquired by intellectual and aesthetic training".

While dictionary definitions can be helpful, they seldom convey the whole story, particularly, as in this case, when it has to do with an abstract concept such as culture.

Webster's definitions refer to culture as we know it today, but it makes no comment about the process by which a culture is achieved in the first place. A number of factors are involved but perhaps the most important is the facility of communication and particularly the ability to communicate abstract concepts. Indeed, the progress of human civilisation can be directly equated with the development of sophisticated language.

Language in its turn has made it possible to ask questions and to supply answers. The quality of the questions and particularly the quality of the answers and explanations establishes another important factor. This is the intellectual environment in which a society exists. If, for example, the story of Adam and Eve is accepted by one society as the factual origin of man, its intellectual environment is wholly different to that of a society which accepts Darwin's theory of the origin of species. Or again, the society which believes the earth is flat will have a different view of many things compared to the society which knows it to be round. It follows, therefore, that the science based society of today is living in a wholly different intellectual environment to the society which caused the first universities to be founded during the 11th and 12th centuries.

Then again, we have become so used to the dominating position held by mankind in the world of living things that we have forgotten, or perhaps we just ignore, how very closely living organisms are influenced by their physical surroundings. Every human society has in part been moulded by such factors as climate, geography, fertility of the land, and its living and working conditions generally. These physical conditions still play a part as one compares, for example, the subtle cultural differences between the European populations in Australia today with their contemporary parent communities in Europe.

I would conclude from this that the culture of a society is the product of its intellectual environment together with its physical environment and, therefore, a reflection of the distinctive attitudes, motives, organisation and habits which have developed within that society over a long period of time.

Culture and Religion.

We know that many so-called primitive societies have well defined and distinctive cultures which have persisted with very little change for thousands of years. Yet there are other societies which must have started from the same primitive base but which suddenly flowered into what we now describe as classic civilisation. Therefore, there must be another factor which has the power to give a society a sense of purpose or a feeling of destiny or whatever description seems suitable to describe what happens to a people when they suddenly begin to improve their cultural standards.

T. S. Eliot once wrote a book which he called "Notes Towards the Definition of Culture". This thoughtful and sensitive treatise deals with a number of very important factors but in particular he suggests that it is religion which transforms societies.

He puts it this way: "The first important assertion is that no culture has appeared or developed except together with a religion; according to the point of view of the observer, the culture will appear to be the product of the religion or the religion the product of the culture".

I do not think I need elaborate on that except to remind you of two illuminating examples. I think most people appreciate that Bali is one of the Indonesian islands. It is very small compared to Java and Sumatra yet it is probably better known than all the other islands in the area. The people of Bali are racially not very different from populations of neighbouring islands yet they have a remarkably distinctive culture. The only significant difference between Bali and the other islands is that the Balinese remained followers of the Hindu religion while the larger islands became Mohammedan.

The other example is the Jews and Arabs of the Middle East. Racially there is little difference between them and their physical environment is very similar. The difference which makes all the difference is religious.

I do not want to get involved in a discussion about the meaning of religion but I think I had better make it clear that I am not concerned with the ritual or the mythology of religions in the context of this address. The importance of religion in relation to culture is that it provides the essential basis for making moral judgements and decisions and an important basis for aesthetic inspiration. This is probably not exactly the right use of the word religion or theology but I think it would be true to say that whatever else may have been added to religions over the centuries, one of their fundamental purposes was to establish and maintain a code of right and wrong.

Western European Culture and Christianity.

As far as our own Western European culture is concerned, I think there can be little doubt that religion played an absolutely vital part in its development. The pagan tribal groups of pre-Roman Europe certainly had their primitive cultures but they were completely absorbed by the more highly organised religions and philosophically sophisticated cultures of Greece and Rome. In much the same way the culture of the Aborigines was swamped when the Europeans arrived in Australia.

Then just when the Roman system was at its height, it was infiltrated by a new religious concept and eventually its myth-religion and Emperor-worship was supplanted by the Christian faith with its more powerful emotional and moral appeal. Yet Christianity did not disrupt the older intellectual and aesthetic traditions. Indeed, the classical scholarship which was virtually destroyed by the sack of Rome was revived and reinvigorated by the Christian view that all things of truth and beauty were a tribute to the glory of God.

The twin streams of Greco-Roman aesthetic scholarship and the Christian doctrine of moral values came together in the monasteries founded by the religious orders. The culture of the monastic scholars was their religion, nothing more nor less, and the transmission of that culture was their sacred trust.

The Christian Church and Universities.

Our whole concept of justice and law, the development of the arts and our whole way of thought derives from our Christian heritage. Therefore, it should come as no surprise to find how many universities owe their origin to one or other branch of the Christian church. For example, the older Scottish universities of St. Andrews founded in 1410, Glasgow founded in 1451 and Aberdeen in 1494 were all established by Papal Charter.

Outside the United Kingdom, Harvard in Massachusetts was founded in 1638, William and Mary in Virginia in 1693, Yale in New Haven in 1701 and Kings in New York in 1754—later to become Columbia—were all established for the primary purpose of training men for the Ministry. In Canada, the Seminary established in 1663 in Quebec eventually became Laval University and which, like the Universities of Montreal and Ottawa, was established by Papal Charter. The University of Malta is another Papal foundation in 1769 although the Knights of Malta established a School of Anatomy in 1674. There are many other examples including this University. On page 8 of the centenary booklet you will find the following: "On 28th February, 1872 a meeting of representatives of the Baptist, Congregational and Presbyterian Churches decided to found a Union College to provide young men with an education beyond school level and to train those desirous of devoting themselves to the work of the Christian Ministry".

It is also quite interesting to note that from 1848 to 1867 there were two Boards of Education in New South Wales. There was the National Board and the Board of Denominational Education consisting of representatives of the Church of England, Roman Catholic, Presbyterian and Wesleyan denominations.

It may be over-simplifying the case to say that the need to transmit doctrine and the urge to acquire scholarship was the beginning of the Christian association with education and that this in turn provided the inspiration for the universities. Yet it is a fact that for nearly 600 years the two ancient universities of England were almost entirely concerned with the preparation of men for the Church and teachers for schools, to the exclusion of all other vocations. It is, of course, true that many young men who had no intention whatever of becoming priests or schoolmasters took advantage of the scholarship available in the universities, but it was through these men, most of whom came from the richer and more powerful families, that the classical traditions of scholarship and aesthetic standards found their way into lay society and exerted a deep influence on its way of life.

However, there is a fundamental difference between the church-related universities such as Oxford, Cambridge and the old Scottish foundations and the church-inspired universities of a later date. Both in England and in Scotland the training of men for the professions of law and medicine was carried on outside the universities by the Inns of Court and by colleges of physicians, surgeons and apothecaries. Even as late as 1830, there were only six university graduates among the six thousand members of the Royal College of Physicians of London and seven in the eight thousand lawyers. Neither can the old foundations claim any responsibility for scientific research. Apart from mathematics and astronomy at Cambridge, scientific workers had to look elsewhere and both the Royal Society and Royal Institution came into being largely because Oxford and Cambridge saw no need to take an interest in science.

At this point it might be as well to mention a fundamental difference between the British and continental university system. Only Paris and Bologna are older foundations than Oxford, which started in 1167 when Henry II recalled the English clerks then studying in Paris, and Cambridge which was started by Henry III in 1231. The difference arose when the clerks or students at Oxford and Cambridge organised themselves into colleges or had colleges provided for them. As a consequence, students going to British universities, with one major exception, have always had to enrol as members of a college or university before being able to receive instruction or to sit the examinations.

In Europe, on the other hand, it was only the teachers who organised themselves into universities while students were free to move from one university to another and to select their preferred teachers. In consequence, the universities founded on the British pattern have always maintained a greater sense of responsibility for the welfare of their students. However, the increasing number of undergraduates attending some of the larger universities is tending to make them more European in character as personal attention to individual students becomes increasingly difficult.

Reformation and Revolution.

The first major change in the mediaeval university system occurred when the Town College of Edinburgh University was established in 1583 with the dual purpose of training men for the reformed ministry as well as men for the professions, particularly law and later medicine. Edinburgh also made another extremely important contribution to the development of university systems. It was to all intents and purposes the first of the unitary, non-residential universities and its teaching structure was based on a professorial system. This was in marked contrast to the College, Fellow, Tutor system of Oxford and Cambridge.

As a result, by the 18th century, Edinburgh had Professors of Medicine, Natural Philosophy, Natural History, Civil Law, History, Anatomy, Chemistry and Midwifery. It can also claim the first Professor of Agriculture who was appointed in 1790. At one time, Edinburgh's reputation stood so high that it had more students from what is now the Commonwealth than all the other British universities put together.

Not unnaturally they took back with them their experience of the Edinburgh system and their acquaintance with Scottish academics so that many university foundations overseas owed a great deal to the Edinburgh pattern.

The structure and purpose of universities, therefore, played a very important part in the transmission of culture. In the first place, the purpose of the university decided the sort of scholarship which could flourish within it and secondly, the loyalty of graduates ensured that new universities were founded for similar purposes and based on similar patterns.

For example, in Canada in 1841 Queen's University was founded by the Presbyterian Church in Kingston and naturally derived its structure from Edinburgh. The University of Quebec was based on the plan of the ancient University of Paris. Here in Australia, Sydney University founded in 1850 and Melbourne University in 1853, both followed the Edinburgh system of an active teaching professorate but many of their best teachers came from Oxford and Cambridge and provision was made for the establishment of colleges of residence in connection with different religious denominations. These two universities blended the inspiration from Scotland and from the ancient English universities but they drew little from the fashionable schemes of university reformers in London, during the early years of the 19th century.

Strangely enough, I could find evidence of only one case until quite recent times, where a university had been established as a deliberate act of cultural diffusion. Trinity College, Dublin was established in 1592 as a place of education for English colonists in Ireland and with the intent of diffusing learning and culture among what were then considered to be the wilds of Ireland.

The three revolutions of the 18th century—the Industrial Revolution which began in the 1750's, the American Revolution of 1772 and the French Revolution of 1788, together marked a major turning point in world history but more particularly they had a profound influence on the further development of universities in Britain and elsewhere. These industrial and political changes were matched by equally important changes in religious attitudes. The Act of Uniformity of 1662 required all members of universities to adhere to the established Church of England. By the middle of the 18th century Protestant dissenters and Roman Catholics were refusing to abide by these religious qualifications and a number of so-called Dissenting Academies were started to train men for their own Ministries as well as in mathematics and the sciences. It was this movement which was responsible for so many non-conformist universities in the new world. These academies also stimulated particularly the old Scottish universities to cater for the professions.

The Dissenting Academies, and their parallel developments in the colonies, although they were inspired by dissenters, they were still based on the idea that religious teaching was the groundwork of all sound education and the only basis of morality. The industrial revolution on the other hand produced an entirely new concept in higher education.

'Godless' Universities.

By the beginning of the 19th century it had reached a stage when a number of ambitious and intelligent working men wanted to know more about the technology of their industries. This led to the creation of mechanics institutes and then to Bentham and Campbell's conception of an entirely liberal and utilitarian university. Dogmatic theology was rejected and all higher education was to be based on reason alone. This was the origin of the University of London which started work in 1828. It was to have no religious conditions whatever, low fees and courses in the professional subjects of law, medicine and natural science. This was the first utilitarian and so-called Godless university and this radical idea caused just the sort of controversy you might expect. Indeed, the idea stirred up such a reaction that conventional opinion insisted upon founding a rival institution on traditional lines, although intended to cater for those not wealthy enough to get to Oxford or Cambridge. This was King's College, London founded in 1831.

London, therefore, found itself with two institutions, each with a completely different philosophical background, both claiming all the rights of independent, degree granting universities. This was considered to be quite unacceptable so that in the end a compromise was reached and London University was formed in 1836 with two colleges; University College, the utilitarian Godless, and King's College, the conventional religious but with other institutions free to join. Twenty years later the position had got out of hand with forty-nine affiliated arts institutions and seventy-three in medicine, the majority of which could hardly be described as institutions of higher learning.

The problem of London University reflects the changing functions of universities and the new attitudes to higher education which were taking place during the early years of the 19th century. However, the transition from religion-based to vocational-based colleges was not to be quite as smooth as some may have hoped.

The solution chosen for the London problem had immensely important consequences because unlike Edinburgh, up to 1858 the 122 affiliated colleges and institutions were responsible for teaching while the University was established solely as an examining body. In effect, the University consisted of examiners and candidates not teachers and students. The abolition of affiliation and the introduction of the external system did not improve matters very much. The division between teaching and examination may have been a sensible compromise and it certainly had the effect of raising academic standards but it had two unfortunate results. It frustrated the teachers because they had to tailor their courses to conform to an examination set by some remote or anonymous committee. Secondly, it inflicted a rigid and tyrannical examination system on a number of developing colleges overseas and although the system was considerably modified at the turn of the century, in many respects it is still with us today.

This compromise pattern of teaching colleges federated under an examining university was copied at that time in many parts of the world notably Toronto, New Zealand, Ireland and India where a large number of denominational and vocational colleges had been established. These naturally resisted all efforts to combine them into unitary universities so the affiliation system seemed the obvious answer but it so happened that the system was introduced into India just as it was abolished in London. Calcutta University, for example, had to deal with some 26,000 students scattered all over the state. This was in 1919, today the number is a quarter of a million of whom nearly a half are taking arts courses.

The new ideas and attitudes released by the revolutionary 18th century also had significant repercussions in the ancient universities.

In 1852 a Commission recommended radical reforms at Oxford and Cambridge and in 1858 the old Scottish universities also underwent extensive alterations. The old universities were immensely stimulated by these reforms and very soon they became the main recruiting ground for staff at the newer universities throughout the Commonwealth.

German Universities.

A most important factor in 19th century university development was the influence of German universities. As they were derived from organisations of teachers only, there developed a natural competition to attract students, in marked contrast to British universities which were in a position to select their students. This competition stimulated experiments and innovation so that when the need for more liberal and vocational courses which grew out of the Industrial Revolution was recognised, the German universities were in a much better position to respond. Perhaps the most significant development was the founding of a university in Berlin by Wilhelm von Humboldt in 1810. It was to be humanist, liberal and vocational and it established three important principles. Teaching should be through scholarship and research, teachers had the freedom to teach what they liked and students had the freedom to study how they liked.

The system had an immense attraction and students and teachers from England and particularly from the United States flocked to German universities. Something like nine thousand went from the United States in the 19th century. Inevitably, they took their ideas home with them and the University College of London, Owens College in Manchester, the University of Michigan and Johns Hopkins among others were all greatly influenced by Humboldt's ideas.

The idea of Lehrfreiheit—the freedom to teach—was widely adopted by British universities and eventually became known as academic freedom and is still very jealously guarded. In effect, it means that the responsibility for courses and examinations rests exclusively in the hands of those who are academically qualified.

The idea of freedom to learn—Lernfreiheit—failed to make any headway in Britain first because of the closed nature of the universities and secondly because of the strict examination system. There was another reason which Lord Ashby describes in these terms: "Although the new institutions of higher education which were established in England were in part a protest against the exclusiveness of Oxford and Cambridge, nevertheless they had to live under the hegemony of these ancient universities. They acquired by a process of social mimicry some of the prevailing assumptions about higher education. Prominent among these assumptions in Oxford and Cambridge was a conviction that the university exists to produce servants for church and state; cultivated men, but not intellectuals. It was assumed that it was more important for a university graduate to be civilised than learned; not thinkers but doers; not theologians but bishops; not philosophers but statesmen; not scholars but school-masters”.

Since those days, both the new and the old universities have been reformed more than once and a whole lot of even newer universities have been founded, but I strongly suspect that these assumptions will always remain an important factor in all thought and discussion about British universities and, therefore, a significant element in the transmission of culture.

The consequences of Utilitarian Education.

The development of utilitarian or vocational universities whether on the federal or the unitary pattern has had important consequences. The religious element of the culture which created the university idea has been almost completely eliminated and, as a result, universities have lost the cultural inspiration which that element gave to them. Its place has been taken by scholarship in science and vocational subjects, but science and technology are only cultural exercises in a limited sense. They may be involved in the search for truth but they are not concerned with the search for wisdom.

From the point of view of the transmission of culture, the danger of basing the function of universities solely on the development of science, technology and utilitarian subjects is that it only involves the manipulation of facts; consideration of motives, consequences and attitudes is purely incidental and they are frequently left to students to discover for themselves as they develop and mature. It is true that facts influence the intellectual environment, indeed men like Kepler and Copernicus, Newton, Darwin and Einstein brought about complete revolutions in our concept of the universe, but facts alone cannot establish aesthetic standards or moral values. In any case, scholarship is not concerned with scientific and technological facts alone. The whole spectrum of subjects grouped under the general description of the arts and humanities depends partly on fact but far more on judgement and inspiration. If there is a cultural vacuum behind the study of these subjects, attitudes towards them will be governed by conflicting political philosophies instead of a common cultural tradition.

The materialist technocracies of Eastern Europe provide ample evidence of the decline of a living culture in a wholly utilitarian system. The culture which they talk about so much was created before their time, and what is left has been merely preserved as if in a museum. Official attitudes to any developments in literature and art are only too well known.

It is true, of course, that the hierarchy of many religions have attempted to control scientific research and free expression, but there is a fundamental difference between a religious faith and a political philosophy. The Christian church in particular suggests a way of thought and relies on the Christianity of its individual members, whereas a political philosophy imposes a system of government and a practical way of life on adherents and opponents alike.

Universities in the Future.

The latest developments in the higher level of vocational teaching seem to suggest that universities may have seriously to reconsider their basic purpose. In the first place, the number of students qualifying for entry into first degree courses is reaching such enormous figures that the administration of huge universities is becoming more and more difficult and the transmission of scholarship and aesthetic values requires a tremendous effort by exceptional staff.

The Open University in Britain using television and the Radio University here in Australia make use of new techniques in instructional communication but without the influence of an academic atmosphere. At the same time more and more technical colleges and similar institutions are running degree courses in the basic technologies. These developments seem to indicate that universities, as originally conceived, are no longer necessary for the purpose of running first degree vocational courses. Or, to put it the other way round, the universities have been transformed into higher level vocational training establishments, primarily concerned with what people do for a living as opposed to how they live their lives.

Modern Universities and Culture.

The original universities were the product of the Christian churches and wherever they were founded they inevitably became the principal agents for the diffusion of the Western European Christian culture. Today, a wholly new situation has arisen. Universities are being set up all over the world within a great variety of cultures just at the moment as universities become the principal agents for the diffusion of science, technology and vocational subjects. This places these new universities in a great dilemma. Divorced from their own cultural origins, and devoted to entirely utilitarian purposes, it is obviously extremely difficult for them to discover their proper place within cultures quite alien to their own traditions. Having just rejected their own cultural inspiration it is not easy to embrace, encourage or attempt to transmit a wholly different set of cultural ideas.

It would be possible for such universities to identify with the nationality of the country in which they are situated, but nationalism by itself is not a progressive culture, neither has it ever produced an advanced civilisation. Europe is composed of a number of distinct nationalities yet they all share the same Christian cultural heritage. Universities can identify with a particular national language but language is merely a means of communication, it expresses ideas, it does not create them.

In theory, they should identify with the local religion and indeed this happened in India many years ago. For example, the Aligarh Muslim University had its origins in 1875, a Hindu University was established in Benares in 1916 and in Hyderabad the Osmania University was set up to teach in Urdu. However, there is always a danger when the religion pre-dates the age of scientific enlightenment or if its philosophy does not satisfy the intellectual or aesthetic standards of the staff and students of a modern university. In that event, the dependent culture is more likely to be destroyed than transmitted.

It may be that it is time to consider separating off the postgraduate schools so as to form more coherent and more humanly integrated academic communities consisting of a mixture of scholars in the arts, philosophies and technologies. Such an institution would be nearer the original concept of a university and from within it might develop a revival in cultural inspiration.

I quoted from T. S. Eliot's assertion that no culture had appeared except together with a religion. As far as universities as cultural transmitters are concerned this assertion seems to be almost entirely justified. There can be little doubt that by far the greater number of our institutions of higher learning and education derive their origin from religious groups. The transmission of their teaching and the encouragement of scholarship in general appears to be a vitally important feature of all the Christian churches and this intellectual and aesthetic training led to the enlightenment and refinement of taste which is the recognisable form of culture.

The important point is that a culture cannot develop and flourish unless the structure of its society actively encourages the transmission of the highest forms of its civilisation to succeeding generations. No culture can spring into existence within the span of one generation and disappear with the next. The development of a higher state of civilisation depends upon intellectual and aesthetic training over several generations. Without that training even the most highly developed civilisations eventually disappear into oblivion.

There are those who maintain that our culture is in decline and that the main reason for this is our obsession with material things and our neglect of spiritual matters. That the modern inheritors of Western European civilisation are principally concerned with materialism is hard to deny but at least there is a compelling excuse. For some two hundred years we have been ringing the runaway bandwagon of the Industrial Revolution following the guiding stars of science, technology and economic growth. This has brought about a standard of comfort and convenience in human life which no previous civilisation has ever known. Indeed this very success has created the awkward conflict of objectives in the present day universities. The practical advantages of sheer scholarship in all the useful subjects has tended to obscure the more general social objectives.

John Henry Newman writing in 1852 suggested what these objectives should be and what was meant by a 'liberal' education: "A habit is formed which lasts through life of which the attributes are freedom, equitableness, calmness, moderation and wisdom; or what in a former discourse I have ventured to call a philosophical habit. This then I would assign as the special fruit of the education furnished at a university, as contrasted with other places of teaching or modes of teaching. This is the main purpose of a university in its treatment of its students".

In 1963 the Robbins report was published which recommended the massive expansion of university education in Britain. After discussing the intellectual aims of universities he had this to say: "Finally there is a function that is more difficult to describe concisely, but that is none the less fundamental: the transmission of a common culture and common standards of citizenship. . . . We believe that it is a proper function of higher education, as of education in schools, to provide in partnership with the family, that background of culture and social habit upon which a healthy society depends”.

Technology and Theology.

All the great civilisations of the world seem to have combined high material standards with a high level of cultural and intellectual achievement but they were by no means egalitarian societies. The secret seems to be in keeping the right balance between technology and theology and between élitism and equality. The purely materialist society inevitably succumbs to the law of the jungle and political dictatorship while the absolute theocracy inhibits any form of intellectual or practical development in a rigid hierarchical system.

In our own case, it may be that our civilisation is simply getting out of balance. Until it can be demonstrated that science, technology and economic growth can take the place of religion and provide that essential inspiration and motive which has created all great civilisations in the past, it would appear that our culture is simply free-wheeling on our Christian inheritance.

How long we can continue in this way is difficult to tell but there are signs that our technocracy is running into trouble. We are beginning to realise that there are limits to growth and limits to resources. We are beginning to witness the operation of the law of the jungle as resources become scarce. There is a lively dissatisfaction with the so-called rat race, with profits-at-any-cost business, and with the impersonal bureaucratic machine of modern government.

At the same time, there is a growing awareness of the value and beauty of our natural environment, of our relationship to all life on earth, of human qualities, and of the wonderful creations of previous generations of mankind. Concern for these matters reflects a spark of revival in moral and spiritual issues and perhaps this may lead eventually to a better balance in our civilisation.

The difficulty is that there is a general disillusionment with the idea of conventional religion largely, I suspect, because of apparently irrelevant squabbles about dogma and ritual. Yet the very essence of most religions, and certainly of Christianity, is that it provides the only rational and satisfactory alternative to expediency in making judgements and decisions on the important issues which each generation has had to face.

Moral judgement is essential in the selection of problems which only science can solve. Indeed, we have come to realise that almost anything is possible as far as science and technology are concerned, but we are only just beginning to realise that we need to exercise moral judgement in deciding whether or not the possible is also desirable and for what precise reasons.

The doomwatchers predict a total collapse of our civilisation, and they have some very convincing evidence to back it up. But I do not believe that collapse is inevitable and I am convinced that the key to survival is in the universities.

This rather sketchy review of the development of universities and their relation to culture shows that things never remain the same for very long, or if they do it is usually a sign of stagnation. Even the most casual observer of the current scene must be aware of a general mood of unease and even anxiety and anyone looking into the future must get the feeling that human civilisation has reached a watershed. The signposts for the next stage are not obvious so that the burden on the leaders in thought and opinion is very heavy indeed. This is the measure of the challenge to universities all over the world but in many ways the challenge to the universities of Australia is even more critical. The Australian culture is no longer a branch of the parent tree, it has put down its own roots and it is showing its own distinctive qualities. To take the gardening metaphor a bit further; cross pollination with other cultures is possible and many would say highly desirable, but the cultivation of the plant itself must take place within Australia's own universities.

It is their responsibility to achieve that balance between technology and theology which seems to be so essential to a healthy society. When that happens and when fact and inspiration can walk hand in hand once again then the intellectual and aesthetic training offered by the universities will result in the advancement of civilisation and the enlightenment and refinement of taste.

COMMEMORATION ADDRESSES, 1974

There were four ceremonies for the conferring of degrees: on 1 May at 11.00 a.m. and 3.00 p.m. and on 8 May at 11.00 a.m. and 3.00 p.m.

At the first ceremony the Chancellor, The Honourable Dr. J. J. Bray, addressed the congregation as follows:

Mr. Vice-Chancellor, Members of the Council and Senate of the University of Adelaide, distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen.

My first duty of course is to welcome you all here on behalf of the University, a particularly pleasing duty in this first Commemoration of our Centenary year.

A Chancellor's speech on these occasions seems to be like all Gaul in Julius Caesar's famous work, divided into three parts. The first is to record some sort of chronicle of outstanding events of the past year, the second is to make some pronouncement or dissertation about some matter connected, if possible, with the University, which should be neither so long as to detract from the main object of these proceedings, the conferring of the degrees, or so short as to leave an audience as distinguished as this without any adequate intellectual stimulus, neither so profound as to be unintelligible without close consideration, or so frivolous as to be unworthy of the dignity of the University. The third thing is to congratulate the new graduates. I address myself to these tasks.

As to the first, I will not repeat what can be read in the Annual Report. But some acknowledgement should be made to those who have left the service of the University and some welcome to those who have entered it. I record with sorrow, the death of Dr. Michael Smyth of the Zoology Department: but what should be said of him will be said more fittingly at a later ceremony when degrees in science are conferred, so I postpone further reference. It is right that I should record the retirement of several members of the staff and express the thanks of the University for their services. I refer first to Doctor Melville who has been Director of the Waite Agricultural Research Institute since January, 1956. I will not attempt to list his many academic distinctions or all the committees and bodies of which he has been a member or all the honours conferred upon him in so many different fields. The Council, as a token, though an inadequate, recognition of his services to the University has conferred on him the title of Emeritus Director. Two other distinguished men retired last year on each of whom the University has conferred the title of Emeritus Professor. One is Professor Davis, Professor of Mechanical Engineering since April, 1946. Again I will not repeat his many distinctions, nor list the contributions he has made to knowledge in many fields, particularly those of acoustics and vibration. Professor Strehlow, has been Professor of Australian Linguistics since 1970, and before then held other academic appointments in the University. He is a scholar in Anthropology and Australian Linguistics of world renown and a member of many learned bodies. For the services of these distinguished and learned men the University is grateful and I record again our gratitude and express our best wishes to them for a long, happy and fruitful retirement. I record also with thanks for the past and good wishes for the future, the retirement of Mr. A. G. Anson, Library Attendant, Mr. G. E. Bennett, a painter on the Maintenance Staff, Mr. R. C. Crossman, gardener on the Maintenance Staff, Mr. L. T. Hart, Laboratory Technician, Mr. E. G. King, Senior Administrative Assistant in the Academic Registrar's Office, Mr. A. Sarmais, Laboratory Technician in the Department of Agronomy and Miss Nancy Thomas, Lecturer in Music. I turn from farewells to greetings. During the last 12 months there have been several additions to our staff. I welcome the Registrar, Mr. A. E. Shields, from Sussex, Professor G. C. Nerlich, Philosophy, Professor R. E. Bogner, Electrical Engineering, Professor R. E. Luxton, Mechanical Engineering, Professor M. I. Bruce, Inorganic Chemistry, Professor P. J. M. Ypma, Economic Geology, and Professor B. Kapferer, Anthropology. On behalf of the University I welcome them all and express the hope and the expectation that their tenure of office will be rewarding to them and to us.

I turn now to the second division of this address. I want to say something about a topic to which I have referred before. That is the amount of academic time devoured by administrative duties. The government of this University is primarily what is called a collegiate government, that is government by academics or persons elected by academics. I include the students in the term academics. The majority of the council are elected by the convocation of electors which is made up of graduates, postgraduates and members of the full time academic staff. This form of University government, I think, derives historically from the form of government of the older British Universities, particularly the Scottish Universities. It is in strong contrast to other forms of university government in vogue elsewhere where the governing body of the university is nominated by the government or is composed of trustees administering what were originally purely private endowments and where the academic or faculty councils are confined to academic matters and administration proper, finance, buildings and the like is largely in the hands of paid administrators subject to the governing body.

There are, of course, very strong, and it may be, overwhelming arguments in favour of University government being in the hands of those who are the most appropriate guardians of academic values but it is worthwhile seeing where this is leading us.

I asked the Registrar to take out some figures for me. He estimates that there are 40 major committees in the University including faculties, committees, that is, permanently established and meeting regularly, another 41 committees dealing exclusively with staff matters, such as appointments and promotions, and a number of ad hoc committees which meet for specific and temporary purposes only. The 40 major committees are estimated to consume 17,500 man hours per year, the 41 staff committees, 1,330 man hours per year and while there are no precise figures available for committees in the third class, the Registrar estimates that they would consume at least as much time as those in the second class, that is 1,330 man hours per year. While I have not overlooked that on some of these committees there are members of council not on the academic staff and on others there are part-time lecturers who are not on the full-time academic staff, nevertheless, the Registrar estimates that the total academic man hours involved in committees of the first class alone represents the equivalent of 10 people working full time for a year or 10 times the cost of a Reader's salary, $159,000.

Is this the best use we can make of the time, skill and the energy of these men and women? I admit freely that to me there is something odd about selecting a man, after painstaking and exhaustive investigation, for a job on the basis of his expertise in a certain field and then using him in another field where his special expertise is not required. It is like buying a race horse after careful enquiry into his breeding and his performance and then using him to haul a milk cart, or like a hospital advertising for and obtaining the services of highly qualified surgeons and physicians and then putting them into the office three days a week to keep the books.

The truth is that a system of University government, evolved in times when the burden of administration was comparatively light, is now required to cope with a highly complex and continually and rapidly changing administrative apparatus. Nor is this process peculiar to universities. In other branches of life within my knowledge I observe administration demanding larger and larger portions of expert time, so that it seems as if the manner of running the machine has become more important than the product of the machine, whereas, of course, the only purpose of the machine is to produce the product.

The consultative processes of recent years by which students and staff are kept more closely associated with University government is highly desirable and highly beneficial in itself but it too demands more meetings, more time and more delays.

And yet the machine works—but at what a cost. It is not to be wondered at that many distinguished academics have renounced professorial chairs for appointments of less salary and less status, for more opportunity for teaching and research which, after all, are the objects for which the chairs were originally filled.

I do not profess to know the answers to these problems. I too cherish academic independence and I would not willingly surrender a particle of it. With some timidity I would suggest that perhaps some enquiry might be made along two lines. The first is decentralisation. Is it only a hopeless fantasy to think that a dividing line can be drawn, so that only matters of grave policy or principle require higher confirmation and other matters are left to the final decision of the body which first has to consider them, unless and until the decision of that body is challenged in some way? The other suggestion I would make is that consideration be given to greater employment of professional administrators to deal with purely administrative matters, as opposed to matters of principle or academic matters generally. I repeat that I do not dispute that the ultimate power and responsibility should remain with academically elected or appointed persons but the Americans have recently isolated a psychological ailment called bureaucrophobia and I wonder whether cases of it are unknown in Australia.

President Lowell of Harvard once said that a university president was supposed to combine the qualities of a trained seal and a matinee idol with those of a foreign diplomat and an educational statesman. There is, of course, a great difference between an American President and an Australian Chancellor and I doubt if I can claim proficiency in any of these roles but at any rate I now turn from the inadequate performance of the fourth of them to the other three. I congratulate you, the graduates-elect, on your impending graduation and I extend to all of you the best wishes of the University. Each of you has now come to the end of your academic career, or at least one chapter of it, and I hope that you have not only equipped yourselves adequately for the careers that you have decided to follow, but also to make and exercise as educated liberal minded and civilised men and women the innumerable choices and discretions of a citizen in this community in this era. I wish you prosperity, success and satisfaction and I hope that you will not lose touch completely with the University. One way of not doing that is to join the Graduates' Union.

At the afternoon ceremony on 1 May, 1974, the President of the Students' Association, Mr. Philip Broderick, addressed the congregation as follows:

Mr. Chancellor, Mr. Vice-Chancellor, members of the Council and Senate of the University of Adelaide, ladies and gentlemen.

Choosing a topic for this afternoon has been difficult and I have decided to give a few comments on student activity in the broadest sense of the word at this University in recent years. The observations are totally subjective.

"Students constitute an integral and essential part of any tertiary institution and as such are full members of its community." This statement is taken from a Student Association submission to the University in 1972 on Rights and Responsibilities within the University. It is not so much platitudinous but rather a serious reflection on the whole University structure that such a statement was necessary and indeed a submission itself was needed on further participation by students in the life of this institution. The University is in its Centenary year and yet it is only in the last four that undergraduates have been admitted to University committees. Of the eighteen formally constituted committees, undergraduate membership is held on nine of these. The nine range from the Council to the Management Committee for Non Collegiate Housing. I feel an enumeration of the disparate committees, and the number of undergraduate members on them, and a comparison with those on which there is no representation, would be of little use.

Since the University functions through committee decision making, the opportunity for a student on these bodies is beneficial for the individual as it gives him a wider experience from his accepted role as an undergraduate, a contact with members of staff on a level usually not possible in a traditional staff/student relationship. They are members in their own right and ostensibly represent the student view, a somewhat nebulous phenomenon, but they also represent a view that is unique, in that it is non institutional, usually younger and occasionally original. It is this understanding which perhaps countermands the criticism that students are useless on these committees since they have not the expertise needed and can be overwhelmed in a confrontation with older more experienced members who usually know each other outside of the committee room. However if it is realised that they are not expected to compete in the same league as academics then they can serve some useful purpose. Admittedly this sounds ominously paternalistic, however I consider it is the only way to look pragmatically at this matter. The more cynical attitude towards student representation is that it has been merely a sop by an administration to alleviate the embarrassment of student pressure to have participation in effectively governing their lives as the largest group in the University community; it being already conceded that total student control will be but a side benefit of the Revolution.

My own feelings regarding this attitude are unclear. I would like to look briefly at some possible factors behind this student move towards a consciousness of its role in the University over the last five years.

Early in March 1960 as a result of the Sharpville massacre 1,000 students from Sydney University demonstrated at the South African Embassy, nine of whom were arrested. This type of demonstration was the first of many such confrontations with the police which become commonplace over the next eleven years. The interesting thing to notice about the "protest movement" from 1960-65 was its commitment to change within the established governmental order. Parliamentary pressure and action was the hope.

From 1965 the primary issue was the Vietnam War, amalgamated with anti-conscription. After the Labor defeat in 1966 a popular front arose containing elements from left of centre to Maoist and anarchist and it was composed of students, and groups outside the universities. Warren Osmond in the article "The State of Student Protest" wrote "From 1967 the movement was away from conventional political solutions, the ambivalence by a State Labor Government and the increasing radicalisation within the universities per se lead to an identification with the cause rather than a sympathy with it." The trend could be seen in the formation of groups such as the Worker/Student Alliance. The action of the Monash Labour Club in sending aid directly to North Vietnam was another.

The frustration of long term goal was ameliorated by short term protest. The Universities, I am generalising about what appeared at Adelaide between 1968-72 to include similar developments in universities in other states, had become a centre for radical political and cultural ideas. The party line on the Barr Smith lawns was well left of the outside community. However the frequency of student demonstrations from 1968 to 72 was only matched by the multiplicity of beliefs of the people who marched. I believe there was no united student movement but a popular front on campus itself primarily united against Vietnam and conscription. It couldn't be described as vehemently as George Orwell categorised Popular Fronts of the 30's. Writing in 1938 he described them as "that nauseous spectacle of bishops, Communists and cocoa magnates marching arm in arm—an unholy alliance between the robbers and the robbed", but it was just as much doomed as a nodal point for long reaching changes within the University and/or outside. The downplaying of the Vietnam War and conscription weakened student consciousness so that as a group of people they lost after 1972 a sense of unity either culturally in a narrow sense of the word, or politically. The issue of pollution perhaps far more serious than the Vietnam outrage has failed to evoke the same response. I choose pollution simply because it could represent a broad basis for student activism.

Neil McLean, President of the Australian Union of Students stated recently that the national movement against the Vietnam War and conscription occurred simply because it was both a national and a local matter. It affected very personally most students in an equal way so that the overall appearance was a uniform national movement. I tend to agree with his reasoning.

Student demonstrations are quite infrequent now and the only tangible result of these years seems to be a well trained and equipped police force to deal effectively with any suspicion of an affront to the Queen's Peace, as was sadly seen on a recent demonstration, the only one emanating from this campus so far this year.

It would seem only logical that the student body from 1969 should start to examine its own position within the university. Adelaide avoided the "occupation syndrome" where students have taken over administration buildings to draw attention to grievances and press for claims. I feel this was due more to the agility of this administration than lack of purpose from the students. Between 1970 and 1972 students began to win places on various committees, the Education Committee being the most recent in 1972 when it reconstituted itself and the student body after a vigorous campaign, managed to have eight positions reserved for its members. It is interesting to note that the University Union which is also run on a strict committee structure and has an annual turnover of one and a quarter million dollars and constitutes the largest single department within the university has had a large student membership on all its committees for many years. So the university cannot fairly be said to have taken an intrepid step but should be given credit for being one of the first universities in Australia to grant student membership on its highest decision making organs.

With this increased consciousness by the student body also came a strong criticism of the education provided by tertiary institutions. The Australian Union of Students allocated a larger proportion of its finances for research and activism in its education portfolio and in 1971 the new Students Association established an Education and Welfare group encompassing organisations concerned with social and educational problems.

In his oration to a congregation of this university on March 2nd His Royal Highness Prince Philip made the following statement: "The danger of basing the function of universities solely on the development of science, technology and utilitarian subjects is that it only involves the manipulation of facts; consideration of motives, consequences and attitudes is purely incidental and they are frequently left to students to discover for themselves." I was impressed by this observation and believe it to be true when one sees the general rejection of the value of university education by many students and an attempt on a departmental and national level through the Australian Union of Students to rationalise and to make a little more relevant the programmes offered for study. Again to quote Prince Philip "the universities have been transformed into higher level vocational training establishments, primarily concerned with what people do for a living as opposed to how they live their lives”.

The student view of the merits of university education from what I can gather is basically a cynical one. Amongst some of my own friends, for instance if one takes Economics or Law one is simply doing Cash I, II, III or The System.

The conventional view at the university according to Warren Osmond is that it is a haven of social custom, a liberal élitist institution, a conscience of a social but not a political institution. This view is still held by a lot of people, in fact the apolitical nature of the university is still a tacit policy of this administration. The other radical view according to Osmond is that it is a degree factory serving a capitalist society with direct links to big business and an arm of the State. Evidence of this attitude was seen when the Students for Democratic Action protested over Weapons Research using the university computer facilities in 1971 and considerable pressure was exerted at the same time to have students admitted to the Outside Grants Research Committee.

From 1970 a different cultural emphasis was apparent on campus. The student newspaper On Dit changed from a conventional publication conveying items of interest and controversy to a more extreme journal reflecting what has become known as counter-cultural. I admired what the editors of that period till now have done but I also believe the bulk of students were fairly alienated by what was put before them. The content was largely influenced by the American underground press and the number of students who were living the life styles assumed and reflected in the paper were very definitely a minority. The proportionate numbers have increased markedly since then but it is one thing to radicalise a student politically but a far more subtle process is needed to polarise him emotionally on a cultural level. The fact that the union buildings were and still are in a state of demolition/restructuring has aggravated the sense of alienation the lack of belonging within the university. This has been very apparent since 1972. Whether apathy is a corollary of alienation I'm not sure, but it seems to be the malaise on most campuses today—the worst reaction to the prior years of activism and perhaps emotional tangents.

Last year the editors of On Dit in an attempt to evoke some reaction printed an edition simply consisting of names on the student roll. The response was minimal.

However the emphasis at Adelaide University now seems to be concentrated on cultural events, if anywhere. There has been a marked increase in student theatrical productions and related activities but the numbers of students involved from the population is relatively small. From my observation there is a general feeling of nostalgia for the 50s and 40s mixed with a fairly astringent cynicism. It is interesting to speculate why there is this nostalgia since most students were very young or not born during this period. At a recent Australian Union of Students conference in Melbourne of Activities Officers the response and activity on campuses was the highest ever since these conferences began, which seems to point that Adelaide is not alone. In reply to a criticism that one S.R.C. was out of touch with its members the Vice-President of A.U.S. answered bleakly, "Who is in touch?"

To quote Warren Osmond again the third view of the university is that it is primarily cultural and non political and provides a conservative compartmentalised education providing a world view unfavourable to solving society's basic problems.

In an ABC broadcast in February on Frank Harris, who was the Editor of the Daily Express towards the close of the nineteenth century, the commentator said, and I quote "although his formal education and tangible achievements were small he lived his life to the fullness of its potential, and how many of us can say that".

If the university is meant to be a means of self fulfilment in the true sense of the word "education" can the university still provide the key to realise a student's potential. I have my doubts.

His Excellency the Governor and Lady Oliphant were present at the morning ceremony on 8 May. In opening the proceedings the Deputy Chancellor, The Honourable Justice Roma F. Mitchell, addressed the congregation as follows:

Your Excellency, Lady Oliphant, Vice-Chancellor, Ladies and Gentlemen.

In this centenary year of the University of Adelaide I have found it of interest to examine the report of the First Commencement of the University held on the 2nd May 1877 at the Adelaide Town Hall. There were not yet any graduands of the University; eight matriculated students and 52 non-matriculated students had begun classes in 1876. At the Inauguration of the University which took place on the 25th April 1876 the Vice-Chancellor had described the plight of lecturers and students in words which make any difficulties which we now experience in providing adequate accommodation and equipment pale into insignificance. He said:

"Our able Professors are impeded, or crippled, in the absence of means and appliances, in carrying on their teaching. For example, they have no Class Rooms, no Library, no Museum, no Laboratory, no Hall or Theatre where their Scientific Apparatus may be placed and regularly brought into teaching use."

It is probably unnecessary to add that this gloomy picture was painted as a prelude to an appeal to the public for funds to enable the defects to be remedied. It is true that the work of the University was carried on in rooms which were leased until the completion of the building now known as the Mitchell Building in April 1882. It is true also that the first professors and students laboured under the difficulties which the Vice-Chancellor described and which I have just cited. The University today is not free of problems many of which stem from the weight of numbers of students. In the four Commemoration Ceremonies of the University of Adelaide this month degrees will have been conferred upon a total of 1,535 students, and a further 262 will have received diplomas of the University. Small wonder is it then that the needs of the University today loom large in terms of expenditure.

At the Inauguration His Excellency, the Governor, Sir Anthony Musgrove K.C.M.G. who, by virtue of his office, was the Visitor to the University spoke strongly in favour of support for the University from government funds. He said:

“I am glad therefore that the Legislature by their annual grant, and by their liberal endowment of lands, have shown the recognition that in principle there is no distinction between the claims of higher education and those of primary instruction to support from the public funds. There are many who, while fully conceding that the welfare of the State requires that the children of the poor, as well as the children of the rich, should receive primary education, refuse to admit that the same arguments which support the one claim are equally forcible as regards the other. But surely it ought scarcely to be necessary to plead the cause of higher education in any community in which the constitution is essentially democratic whatever may be the form of government. . . . It is obvious that there can be no intelligent guidance of the intricate affairs of State without something of that discriminating knowledge which comes from thorough training of the higher faculties . . . it is clear that the more of higher education you can have in the society the better.”

His Excellency added somewhat cynically

“All this is rather languidly assented to than earnestly felt.”

This plea strikes a curiously modern note. For how many years has it been argued that not only primary and secondary education but also tertiary education should be available free of payment of fees. Now that goal has been achieved, but perhaps some of you graduands who have been the last of the fee paying undergraduates may think that the achievement has been belated. But we still cannot claim that tertiary education is freely available for all while we are confronted with the necessity to impose quotas upon student enrolments. This is a nation-wide perhaps a world-wide problem and one to which there can be no simple answer. Those of you who are today receiving your primary degrees have justified your selection for matriculation by the University, but it would be wrong to assume that all those who were not matriculated, although they had passed the requisite examinations, would have been unfitted to complete a degree. If it is true, as Sir Anthony Musgrave said nearly 100 years ago, that “the more of higher education you can have in the society the better”, then we should be able to offer tertiary education to all who wish and have the capacity to undertake it. This is yet to be accomplished.

I have allowed myself to wander from the First Commencement back to the Inauguration Ceremony. The purpose of the First Commencement was to admit ad eundem gradum graduates of universities recognised by the University of Adelaide who were resident in South Australia and who had signified the intention of accepting a degree of this University. They were to constitute the Senate of the University which the University Act provided should be set up when there were not less than 50 graduates of the University qualified to be members of the Senate. The ceremony was presided over by the Chancellor, Bishop Short, in the presence of the Visitor His Excellency the Governor. Seventy graduates of other universities received degrees ad eundem gradum, the first of these being the Chancellor who, in his address, referred to "days like the present when all classes seem to be fired with ambition to share in the advantages of higher education". Again a curiously modern statement. He claimed that the University would be part of what he called the Republic of Letters. This Republic he acclaimed in the following way:

"Wide as the world, it is the commonwealth of Genius; the domain of Intellect; the abode of Science, Arts and Literature; the home of Poetry and Fiction, the birthplace of Liberty and Order; the sanctuary of Truth and Natural Law."

Such hyperbole would today be greeted at best with derision. Nevertheless we can justly claim that through some of our graduates this University has achieved fame in various spheres. In this centenary year we remember their achievements with pride and with gratitude. It is not, I think, amiss for me to mention in this connection that graduate who is now the Visitor to the University His Excellency, the Governor, Sir Mark Oliphant K.B.E., one of our most distinguished graduates in physics who honours us with his presence here today. His Excellency is the first graduate of the University to occupy the office of Visitor and we appreciate the interest which he shows in our activities.

There is another distinguished graduate of this University whose valuable services we lost when he died at the early age of 38, whom it is appropriate for me to mention today. I refer to Dr. Michael Smyth a member of the staff of the Zoology Department for nine years. He entered the University of Adelaide in 1956 as an undergraduate after an outstanding career at Prince Alfred College, and graduated with first class honours in Zoology in 1960. As a Rhodes Scholar he completed his doctorate in philosophy at Oxford, and then undertook two years post doctoral work in California returning to this University as a lecturer in the Zoology Department in 1965. His untimely death has been mourned by all those who knew him. Through the generosity of the members of his family and friends a prize, to be known as the Michael Smyth Memorial Prize, has been established. The first prize winner is Miss Ronda Joy McWilliams who has been admitted to her degree at this Commemoration. She was placed first in the honours list for zoology in 1973, and her work had been to some extent supervised by Dr. Smyth. She was therefore a most appropriate first recipient of the prize the establishment of which is a fitting tribute to a valued scholar of this University. I congratulate her and all the other Prizemen and Scholars for 1973.

Last week at the Annual General Meeting of the Australian Academy of Science in Canberra our Vice-Chancellor, Professor G. M. Badger, was elected unopposed to the office of President of the Academy. This is a signal honour to him and, through him, to the University. I take this opportunity of extending to him the congratulations of the University upon the attainment of this notable milestone in his outstanding career.

I congratulate all upon whom degrees have been conferred at this ceremony and extend to you my good wishes for your success in your chosen careers. Some of you will continue actively in the service of the University in one capacity or another. I hope that all of you will continue to regard yourselves as members of the University and will show that lively interest in its future which actuated the 70 graduates of other Universities who elected to seek admission ad eundum gradum at the First Commencement Ceremony. As graduates you are members of the Senate of the University. You are entitled to become members of the Adeladie University Graduates' Union. I trust that you will all do so. I mentioned the problems relating to the quota system for undergraduates. There are many other problems facing the University today. Many of you as undergraduates have been active in discussing and in endeavouring to find solutions for some of these problems. It is important to the University that as graduates you will continue to give it the benefit of your collective wisdom. It relies upon your support to ensure that in the future we shall supply the tertiary education which will be of most benefit to the individual and to the community as a whole; and that we shall not falter in research or in co-operation in community projects by means of which universities spread the light of their knowledge.

At the afternoon ceremony on 8 May, 1974, the Deputy Vice-Chancellor, Professor N. T. Flentje, addressed the congregation as follows:

Deputy Chancellor, Vice-Chancellor, Members of the University, Graduands, Ladies and Gentlemen.

One of the trends in society today which, it seems to me, may lead to a better world tomorrow, is the concern which many people, especially the young, are showing for those who, through no fault of their own, have been seriously disadvantaged in life. The concern may be on a national scale for people affected by war or famine as in Vietnam, Bangladesh, or Ethiopia; or the concern may be on a local scale for people nearer home who are handicapped by sickness or other physical disability or by social conditions, or by poverty in varying degrees.

In this concern for the disadvantaged, especially those handicapped by poverty or other social problems, the question of education is seen as a matter of great importance for two reasons; first because many people assume that improved education will automatically improve the quality of living in both the financial and social aspects, that it is in fact a major factor in social reform; second many people make the further assumption that in children the handicap of poverty most frequently derives from lack of parental access to proper education.

As a result of this thinking we have heard a great deal in recent years about socio-economic groups and about élitism. I would like to make a few comments about these terms and the concepts that have been developed around them. I am aware that some of my remarks may be contentious and this occasion does not lend itself to debate. I hope then, my comments will be accepted as provocation for later debate if they warrant it, rather than being in any sense dogmatic.

First we have heard a lot about the lower socio-economic groups. I don't care for this sort of terminology myself as I have often found that when descriptive names are coined, people assume they understand the situation and cease to think critically about it. The term lower socio-economic groups was coined to include people who are poor in relation to the community average, or whose social conditions are unsatisfactory again in relation to the community average.

We still do not know enough about the effect of poverty and unsatisfactory social conditions on the education of children, but there are many people in the University concerned about the problems. I have time to mention only two examples: A few years ago a number of students involved in Social Action joined a group of nurses who were already active in helping with the education of young children in the south-east corner of the city of Adelaide. Many of these children had a poor social background relative to the rest of the community, and the group of students known as the South-East Corner Development Group undertook a wide range of activities to help in their educational and social development. The Department of Social Welfare and the University, through the University Union, took a substantial interest in this work and a few months ago the State Education Department also agreed to assist in the work by the establishment of a Special school there. Many of the students involved now have extended their activities into other districts working especially with children who have background language difficulties because in the home environment English is not the usual language. I hope in the next year or two that some of the students who have been involved in this work will have opportunity to write at some length about their work, as it will give valuable additional information about the problems that the child's social background poses in relation to education. My second example is one in which I was involved with five other people as a committee established by the State Government in 1970 to examine the educational needs of Independent Schools and advise the Government on the distribution of its grants to these schools. In the course of this work we had opportunity to assess not only the needs of Independent schools, but to compare them with some State schools. It was quite clear to those of us involved in the committee that there were considerable differences between schools in material resources such as playing areas, classroom amenities, libraries and other teaching aids, as well as differences in human resources, such as the number and qualifications of teachers. The reports of this committee have been published each year and perhaps at some time in the future there will be an attempt to assess what effect the grants have had on the quality of education of the children in these schools.

Both these examples I have given represent attempts by people, concerned to improve the educational opportunities for children, by developing the social background and by improving the school itself. Attempts, in other words, to make the educational opportunities for children more nearly equal.

The second and related cry we have heard in this context of education is that of élitism. It has become fashionable, at least among some people, to decry, or even deplore, an educational or intellectual élite. Élite means the best, and an intellectual élite means the best intellects of the community. Why then should we deplore the best, especially when, as I have said earlier, we are concerned to improve as far as we possibly can the educational opportunity for everybody. It seems to me we have confused élite with privilege on the one hand and perhaps been dissatisfied with assessment of élite on the other hand.

From the very start of children's lives at the time of conception, they are all different from each other because of their different genetic make-up. These differences include some characteristics that are fixed and after birth are easily measured, such as colour of eyes, colour of hair, pigmentation of the skin. They also include some characteristics which must be regarded as potential, such as height, weight and shape, and the development of the potential is dependent on the subsequent environment. There is strong evidence that among these latter differences is the type and level of intellectual potential or capacity; in some the potential is for original or creative activity, in others for practical or applied activity and so on and the differences in level of potential ability range from high to low.

However, these differences are subsequently modified by the environment. The child may not be able to fulfil its potential because as I have said earlier there may be restrictions in the social or economic background. To illustrate the confusion I believe has arisen regarding the use of the word élite, we often speak of those families whose social and economic background is such as to allow their children to fulfil their potential as the social and economic élite and those families whose social and economic background is not such as to allow the children to fulfil their potential as being underprivileged. This has confused a social and economic élite with an intellectual élite or the intellectual best and in some places has caused people to reject the notion or value of an intellectual best. The task ahead of us is to improve the educational opportunities for all children so that in Plato's words . . . 'every person irrespective of sex or social rank should receive the education which will enable him to play the part in life for which he or she is best fitted'.

The other source of confusion and debate lies in the question of assessment. How do we assess the different types and levels of natural ability? There is, of course, a great deal of experimenting going on in this area at the present time and it is difficult to see the outcome. The problem is to carry out proper experiments whereby we can actually measure the success or otherwise of the assessment methods. Most people would probably agree that a variety of methods can be used to separate large differences in types and levels of ability, but reliable separation between small differences is virtually impossible at present. I believe it is most important that this work be accelerated because the educational methods we use at all levels, primary, secondary, tertiary and further education must be further developed if we are to achieve a goal of providing the variety of education which will allow people of all types and levels of ability to realise their full potential in whichever direction their abilities lie. I believe there is serious and costly confusion throughout Australia in tertiary education at the present time because of the uncertainty about the role of Universities, Colleges of Advanced Education and other Institutions in providing the variety of education about which I have just spoken. Muddled discussions about élitism and to a lesser extent assessment have added considerably to this confusion.

May I conclude by saying I believe that if civilisation is to continue being civilised, indeed if it is to survive, it is essential that we follow Plato's advice to provide the equal opportunity for education that every person, irrespective of sex or social rank, should have to enable him or her to play the part for which he or she is best fitted. We shall need the best contributions that everyone can make, and rather than decrying an intellectual best we need urgently that intellectual best to provide leadership for the rest of us in solving the problems that face us in the world.

Those of you who graduate today may or may not wish to be called an intellectual élite or best. I would not wish to waste time in arguing that with you.

But you are people who have high intellectual ability and you are on the way to achieving your full potential. In that sense you are privileged, but you have a corresponding responsibility to exercise your abilities in helping other people.

I congratulate you on your achievement and warmly wish you well in your tasks ahead.

CENTENARY ASSEMBLY

A Centenary Assembly was held in the Adelaide Festival Theatre at 8.00 p.m. on Friday, 16 August, 1974, when official representatives of Universities, Foundations and Learned Societies presented their gifts and greetings.

The Right Honourable Lord Todd, F.R.S., Master of Christ's College, Cambridge, delivered the following oration:

THE NEW CHALLENGE

A hundred years is a very short period in the history of the human race and yet the century of existence of this great University has had an importance out of all proportion to its duration in time. For more has happened in that hundred years than in all the previously recorded history of man. It is difficult indeed for us to picture what life was really like in 1874 although the grandparents known personally to many of us were then in the prime of life. Railways, it is true, were in existence but Otto's first internal combustion engine was still two years away; oil had as yet achieved little significance as an energy source, and such means of communication as telephones were still undreamed of. In the industrial slums of Europe and America poverty and disease were rampant and social security for the workers unknown. True it is that vast changes in our society had occurred since the Industrial Revolution began in the late eighteenth century. But in 1874 we were just entering upon a new era—one which could well be described as the era of the Second Industrial Revolution the impact of which was to be enormously greater than the First and which has continued until today with ever-increasing momentum. In the century that followed we were to see transport by land, sea and air revolutionised by the internal combustion engine, distance annihilated by telephonic and telegraphic communication, by radio and television, the emergence of the computer as an integral part of everyday life, the tapping of nuclear energy and finally man's break-out from the limitations of earth and his ventures into the immensity of outer space. Parallel with all these advances world population was to treble in size and achieve a rate of growth which, if it continues, will cause it to double again within the next thirty years or so. The reasons for this vast and indeed frightening increase in population are doubtless many and various; increasing affluence and improvements in agriculture are among them but equally important has been the fantastic progress in medicine. During this century improvements in public health and sanitation coupled with the control of communicable disease have vastly increased life expectation in all countries mainly by eliminating, in large measure, mortality in the younger age-groups.

Walter Hughes, Bishop Short and their associates were men of vision with a sure faith—which may at times have been hard to sustain—in the future of this great country. Adelaide may have been a small town of 30,000 souls but it was the capital of the Province of South Australia, a land separated by vast distance from the parent civilisation of Europe. Indeed, given the state of communications and the nature of Australia, it could be said that for all practical purposes it was almost as remote from the other infant capital cities of Melbourne and Sydney. To our founders it was clear that provision had to be made for the Province to produce its future leaders and that the establishment of the University of Adelaide was therefore an investment for the future. In founding it they were, without doubt, influenced by the traditions of the ancient Universities of Scotland which have, indeed, furnished the basic educational patterns of Australia as a whole. Yet it would be wrong to attribute the foundation of the University solely to these considerations, for I do not believe we can really regard it in isolation. South Australia may have been a remote pioneer state but its leading citizens at least were influenced consciously or unconsciously by movements in the world as a whole. For the quarter century between 1850 and 1875 was crucial in the development of the modern world—a veritable hinge of time bringing changes from which none could opt out.

To understand this we must go back a little way to the late eighteenth century. The so-called Industrial Revolution was then triggered off by the appearance of a number of chance discoveries or inventions made at more or less the same time. Their conversion to large scale technological innovation was brought about by entrepreneurs who were often the inventors themselves. These innovations differed little in type from previous innovations which marked man's technological progress over the centuries. Why there should have been such a fortuitous appearance of such a group of inventions at the same time I cannot explain, but I am sure that the major one and, indeed, the one really responsible for the Industrial Revolution was the invention of the steam engine. Until then man had been largely dependent on muscle power either of himself or of animals, eked out by water and wind power (both rather static and at the same time fickle sources of power). The steam engine, almost unaided, revolutionised the whole outlook for society by placing in its hands for the first time almost unlimited mechanical power in a flexible and controllable form.

The invention of the steam engine had, however, little or nothing to do with science even if James Watt, who introduced the condenser, learned about latent heat from his friend Joseph Black the chemist. Science had been advancing steadily if unobtrusively from the time of the so-called "scientific revolution" in the seventeenth century but it was still, at the time of the Industrial Revolution, largely a pursuit of amateurs and had little impact on ordinary life and affairs. It did, however, like most other activities receive a considerable stimulus from the thrusting, aggressive nature of society in the early phase of the Industrial Revolution and its progress speeded up accordingly. By about the middle of the nineteenth century science had advanced to a point where its experimental approach could be consciously brought to bear on practical problems. It is no accident that science and its methods began to be increasingly applied to the solution of industrial, military, medical, agricultural and even administrative problems from this time onwards. As a result the element of chance in discovery leading to technological innovation was reduced, technology itself became more sophisticated and the way was opened to the staggering advances in the material aspects of civilisation which have characterised the past hundred years. The history of my own science of chemistry during the period 1850-1875 illustrates this change very clearly. It was in it that the great chemical industries which have dominated technological advance in almost every field had their birth and grew up side by side with organic chemistry, but parallels are to be found in most other sciences and in medicine.

It was inevitable that the genesis of science-based technology would have a profound effect on our educational patterns. Education in Western Europe from the time of the Renaissance had been based primarily upon the classical cultures of Greece and Rome and in it science had little or no part. But the drive to the new technology called for a much greater number of educated people, some trained to further science and the technology based upon it, and others to cope with the greater complexity of industry and affairs resulting from it. Thus it was that the second half of the nineteenth century saw a notable growth and expansion of higher education, partly by the enlargement of existing universities and technical institutions and more especially by the creation of new ones. The foundation of the University of Adelaide was thus very much in the spirit of the times. It is worth noting, for example, that from the first the new University sought to give degrees in science and, after quite a struggle with the Government of the United Kingdom, it was permitted to do so in 1880. That permission to confer degrees on women was sought and obtained at the same time is a further tribute to the wisdom and foresight of the Founders whom we commemorate today.

The move towards science and technology inevitably brought demands for an increase in the vocational aspect of university education. Vocational training was not a new thing in universities of course, although save in medical education it had slowly diminished in importance since the Renaissance and especially since the spread of printing. The heavy emphasis on classical studies and especially on the Greek and Latin languages in the mediaeval universities was surely not unconnected with the need to produce scribes and others who could handle the classical tongues and was in a sense the equivalent of the technical education of today. With the invention and spread of printing and the declining use of the classical languages in business and affairs this particular need became less important, and the universities of Europe busied themselves with broader education suitable for future leaders in society—in the church and law—and with their vital and inescapable duty to carry the torch of learning and to disseminate our intellectual and spiritual heritage. Since social attitudes react to changing circumstances but slowly, it is not surprising that by the early part of the nineteenth century universities were getting out of touch with the new world of the Industrial Revolution and that when in mid-century science based technology arrived upon the scene they were largely unprepared. Hence, of course, the flurry of new creations in the second half of the century, the reform of existing universities, and the expansion in student numbers. At this time too the technical universities of Europe appeared, primarily, I believe, because of the structural rigidity of the older German universities which were particularly resistant to the introduction of the new technology.

The pattern of the infant University of Adelaide, as indeed that of her two sister universities in Australia, was based upon that of the ancient Universities of Scotland. This was hardly surprising; Australia was then a British colony and the popular and democratic character of the Scottish universities was more appropriate to South Australian circumstances than the only alternative of the time, namely, the somewhat patrician collegiate Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. The Scottish pattern had, of course, been substantially reformed and brought more up to date by the Royal Commission of 1858. It is of more than passing interest that the main outline of their constitution as laid down then still survives although it has been modified in various ways by the Act of Parliament of 1889 and by a series of ordinances made by successive Royal Commissions and by the Privy Council. Overall, the curricular changes made by the Commissioners in the three decades from 1850 markedly reduced the powers of the old faculties, paid more heed to the rights of the students and sought to broaden considerably the curriculum in Arts; the Bachelor degree in Science also made its appearance for the first time. From the first the University of Adelaide has functioned in the Scottish tradition and, subject to minor differences arising from geographical location, its course has been academically parallel to that of the Universities of Scotland and, in some measure, to that followed by the civic universities of the United Kingdom which have developed during the past century.

This is not the occasion to discuss in detail all the changes that have occurred even if it were possible to do so in a single address. But looking back over the hundred years of our existence the wheel appears to have come full circle. Our University was born in a period of educational turmoil complicated by rising student numbers. Today, once again, is heard the cry that university courses are too narrow and rigid, that in certain respects the rights and needs of students are being ignored and again there is the irruption of new developing areas of study like social, environmental and computer sciences into our curriculum arena. Why all this should have happened at this time may be hard to explain but I believe the origin of our troubles is, in broad outline, fairly clear. It lies in the slow rate of change in social attitudes (and hence in the educational patterns which derive from them) as compared with the increasingly rapid rate of change in science and technology. This, as I have already argued, was the primary reason for the changes forced upon existing universities in the decades immediately following 1850. Advancing technology was bound to require highly specialised training for its practitioners and the society in which it flourished of necessity acquired a complexity which called for more and more specialised knowledge in those who conducted its affairs. And so the broadly based degrees introduced in those days gradually gave way to specialist Honours degrees and the resulting imbalance was exacerbated by the steady increase in the demand for higher education which accompanied the general rise in living standards. The sudden and worldwide eruption of student disorder in the mid-sixties of this century was, I believe, partly due to the inappropriateness of the courses offered to a substantial proportion of the rush of new entrants to universities which set in shortly after the Second World War. But its appearance was only one symptom of a strange disillusion and lack of confidence which quite suddenly seems to have affected our society at that time. Only twenty-five years before, dazzled as we were by great achievements during wartime, there was a universal feeling that provided we put our faith in science and technology and produced more and more of their practitioners the millenium would shortly be upon us. But things didn't work out that way and in face of rising pollution, exponential growth in energy and natural resource utilisation, and with the spectre of Malthus abroad again in the underdeveloped countries of the third world, there came a sudden loss of confidence and a swing away from science as being somehow responsible for our troubles. Such a swing is, of course, regrettable. It is what man does with scientific knowledge that can cause trouble and not science itself. I believe, indeed, that only science can provide an answer to the many pressing problems of today.

It is no use looking at the past and sighing for happier days—indeed they ever were happier for any section of the community. There is an old Spanish proverb which says that “the mill grinds no corn with water that has passed”, and we cannot turn the clock back even if we would. We must learn to live with the advances made in science and technology and to concentrate our efforts on seeing that they are so used as to benefit mankind and to minimise wasteful and destructive inroads upon our natural resources and our physical environment. The magnitude and urgency of the problems we face have been underlined by the shock administered to the world system by the energy crisis suddenly precipitated as a result of restrictions on oil supplies less than a year ago. The universities alone cannot resolve these problems but they have a vital role to play in their resolution. Earlier in this address I suggested that this great University was born at a hinge of time; for the reasons just given I believe it celebrates its centenary at another, and perhaps even more crucial one. Hence my belief that a reappraisal of higher educational patterns has become a matter of urgency.

A university has two functions—a vocational and a cultural—and if it is to play its full part in the community it must discharge both in harmony with one another. It must, above all, be liberal in its outlook, avoid dogma, and be receptive to new ideas. Since a university must produce the scholar, the man of affairs and the specialist in science, technology, medicine or the law, it must clearly also be practical in its approach. As John Buchan once said “A University cannot be too practical in the right sense . . . but first and foremost it must make citizens in the full sense . . . citizens of the immortal kingdom of mind and spirit”. As Buchan recognised, there is no conflict between the practical and any other aspect of knowledge. There can be few areas in higher education without a vocational element and few indeed the students without some vocational aim, and so energy devoted to differentiating between allegedly narrow “applied knowledge” and “theoretical knowledge” is largely wasted. The reconciliation of theory and practice and their welding into a broadly based educational whole can be seen at its clearest in modern university medical schools. Narrowness in specialist curricula where it seems to exist lies not in the difference between the practical and the theoretical, the pure and the applied, but rather in the accepted boundaries of the disciplines of specialisation. In science at least we tend to adhere far too closely to disciplinary separations dating back to the last century despite the obvious fact that modern science has so-blurred the outlines of the traditional disciplines that most advances of consequence are made today in the no-man's land between them. I believe that dissatisfaction with our specialist courses and the demand for reappraisal stems largely from this adherence to outmoded disciplinary divisions and it will only disappear if we move towards new types of interdisciplinary courses, especially in fields closely bordering on technology. Accompanying this move I expect to see a resurrection in a new form of the multidisciplinary courses which were the backbone of the reformed Scottish Universities last century. In these multidisciplinary courses natural science will have to be included, as well as the so-called arts and social sciences, for no democracy can hope to survive in the future whose leaders in civil life have no real understanding or, at least, awareness of the science and technology which have made us what we are, and which alone can provide the means to ensure our survival as a race. What the universities of the world do in the next ten or fifteen years could well determine our long term future.

Herein, perhaps, lies the greatest duty of our universities today. For many of our present troubles can be traced to our failure to plan for or even to consider anything but the short-term future. It is perhaps natural that man's relatively short life-span should limit his outlook in some degree but in recent times he seems to have become even more shortsighted than before. Increasing affluence and the all-embracing arrangements for social security that have accompanied it have made it all too easy to ignore the future as something which is not really our business but is a matter which will be taken care of by somebody else. This ostrich-like attitude on the part of individuals is naturally reflected in governments, since politicians of necessity react to and reflect only the short-term demands of the public. Now, however, we must change. We must become oriented towards the future rather than the present, to the enduring rather than the transient. We must face up to the studied control of our population and change our society to one much more dependent on renewable as distinct from non-renewable natural resources for its materials and its power. If we do not then man may prove to be just the latest of the long line of animal species which have each for a time dominated the earth and then vanished in the course of our planet's long and stormy history. I believe we can succeed and that we need not follow that historical pattern; but if we are to do so we will need a great change in our outlook and the society which results will assuredly be very different from that which we know today. So far our society has always relied upon growth and expansion to get us out of trouble rather in the way that the advice "Go West, young man" provided the universal panacea in the days of the expanding frontier in the United States of America—and also, in a slightly modified form, here in Australia. It is clear, however, that we must now begin to face up to the problems—and they are many—of a "steady state" or "no-growth" society. How to achieve anything approaching a constant population, while retaining an age distribution which will enable society to function, is in itself a tremendous problem which has received as yet far too little attention. To deal with it and with all the other problems will make demands upon us which will tax to the limits not merely our science and technology, but all our spiritual and cultural heritage.

Here then lies our challenge—a challenge greater than any the universities have faced before. If they fail the outlook is indeed bleak. But they will not fail. When we look back over the years at what our founders and predecessors have achieved here in Adelaide, can we really doubt that when our University celebrates its bicentenary it will do so as a vital constituent of the great Australia that lies in the future?

CENTENARY COMMEMORATION

At a Special Centenary Commemoration held at 8.15 p.m. on Saturday, 17 August, 1974 in the Bonython Hall, the congregation was addressed by the Visitor of the University, His Excellency Professor Emeritus Sir Mark Oliphant, K.B.E., D.Sc., F.A.A., F.R.S., as follows:

Deputy Chancellor, Vice-Chancellor, Members of the Council and Senate of the University of Adelaide, Distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen.

I am deeply conscious of the honour which is mine in being invited to address the distinguished assembly gathered here to celebrate the one hundredth birthday of our University. Accordingly, I have given much thought to what I should say on such an occasion. A university is not a campus, or buildings, endowment or equipment. It is not its Council or administrators, however good these may be. It is people—primarily scholars, and the students who study under their guidance. Therefore, I feel it proper for me to speak briefly about a few from the past, whose work and influence created the great reputation of our University, and about some present here today who add to that honourable estate.

Soon after the war, that great British statesman of science, Sir Henry Tizard, visited Australia. Upon his return to London, Patrick Blackett and I met him on the staircase of the Athenaeum Club. He was enthusiastic about his experiences and remarked, "You know: the Australians could do anything they wanted to, if only they wanted to!"

The history of the University of Adelaide shows that there have been some, in South Australia, who not only knew what they wanted to do, but did it. Founded one hundred years ago, when the population of Adelaide was less than 50,000, it soon recruited to its service men with remarkable talents.

Horace Lamb, one of the original professors, the father of the science of hydrodynamics, laid here the foundations of his monumental contributions to that branch of mathematical physics which has become of increasing practical importance. It describes phenomena as diverse as some of the properties of a star, or the flow of water in a river.

W. H. Bragg succeeded Lamb. He married the daughter of Sir Charles Todd, Postmaster-General of the then independent colony of South Australia, and builder of the transcontinental telegraph line, which brought the State into telegraphic contact with the outside world. In the basement of the original building of the University, Bragg carried out his classical investigations of the ionising properties of the alpha-particles from radium. His son, W. L. Bragg, was born in Adelaide, and was to share with his father the Nobel Prize for establishing the nature of the reflection of X-rays by crystals, and its use for determining the arrangement of atoms in solids.

Douglas Mawson, Antarctic explorer, and Professor of Geology, not only made an epic journey across the frozen south, and explored areas of Antarctica then unknown. He also laid the foundations of truly scientific geology in South Australia. I remember attending a discussion between Mawson and the Professor of Anatomy, Wood-Jones, on the then new concept of continental drift put forward by Wegener. Wood-Jones was enthusiastically in favour, believing that it helped explain the distribution of animals over the earth and the course of organic evolution. Mawson was unrepentantly against the whole ridiculous hypothesis which required that rigid rocks should flow like a viscous liquid. Both were right, I understand for the wrong reasons! It is, however, one of my treasured memories to recall the fight between these giants.

Howard Florey, who gave penicillin and antibiotics to the world, was a graduate of the Medical School of this University, and a South Australian Rhodes Scholar. Few men have contributed so much to human health and happiness. Few men have worried more about that other result of advances in control of disease, the population explosion.

It is natural, perhaps, that I have spoken so far of some whom I have known well personally because they were men of science. I must not forget that there are many who, in other fields, have enhanced the reputation of the University.

Sir William Mitchell was a philosopher as much concerned with the mechanisms of the brain as the products of the mind. However, his genius lay in his skill and common sense as a university administrator. He accepted the then part-time post as Vice-Chancellor in 1916, and guided the University through the difficult years during and between two world wars. In many ways, during this transition time for all Australian institutions of higher learning, he was the University. We owe this shrewd and kindly Scot a great debt of gratitude for his devoted leadership.

John Bishop, as Elder Professor of Music from 1948 to 1964, South Australian born man of sensitivity and vision, did more than any other to make the University part of the whole community. The Australian Youth Orchestra, which delights both players and audiences, is a living memorial to Professor Bishop. But perhaps his greatest gift to Adelaide is our biennial Festival of Arts, which he inspired, and which, in turn, brought into being the remarkable Festival Complex, through the enthusiasm the Festival engendered in our Governments.

Professor John Salmond brought scholarship in law to this State, establishing a tradition followed not only by his successors, but also by the Chief Justice, our present Chancellor, Dr. Bray. Elton Mayo, who began a Medical Course and finally graduated here in Arts early this century, wrote books on the human problems of management in a technological age which transformed an exercise in authority into a complex sociological activity.

Others from the University of Adelaide have contributed significantly to knowledge of nature, which is science, to knowledge of mankind through the social sciences, to the practice of medicine and surgery, to engineering, to literature and to music.

Today, the University admits to its roll of graduates eight distinguished scholars who honour us by their presence on this auspicious occasion. Together, they represent a significant part of the spectrum of disciplines practised and taught in this University. I note that while John Vaizey is an economist, he is to be recognised as Doctor of Letters. In the present state of the Australian economy, this distinguished man may well prefer that designation!

Our increasing realisation of the antiquity of the aboriginal occupation of Australia, makes it fitting that we should honour today a leading anthropologist, Dr. Geoffrey Harrison. Government, people, and learned bodies such as this University, are at last recognising their obligations towards the indigenous peoples of this country, and are endeavouring to record and preserve their language and culture.

Michael Young studies our modern society, the community rather than the individual becoming the unit. Even here, in spacious Adelaide, we experience problems which arise from propinquity and congestion. The behavioural sciences are young, but they have become vitally important. We thank him for his help and encouragement with research and teaching in subjects of growing significance.

The vagaries of climate and rainfall in this part of the world are notorious, but the reasons for such eccentric behaviour are not understood. Professor Kenneth Hare, of the University of Toronto, has studied such phenomena more completely than most other geographers and meteorologists. We are proud to recognise his distinction.

The culture of a nation is bound up inextricably with its literature, its art, theatre and music. Adelaide is proud of its record in these fields. The University is pleased that it can crown its contributions to learning and creativity in such disciplines, by admitting to its degrees Professor Philip Thody from the University of Leeds, who brings lustre to our studies in French Literature; Elizabeth Sweeting from Oxford, who represents almost every facet of culture, particularly all that is embodied in that magical word, theatre; and Professor Barry Brook, of New York, an unrivalled scholar in music.

I feel that I must make particular mention of Sir Harrie Massey, for he and I were in the Cavendish Laboratory, Cambridge, at the same time. He is the representative of the Royal Society of London, of which he is Secretary and Vice-President. Also, he was a pioneer of both theoretical and experimental work on the positive electron. It seems that the strange properties of the transient combination of a positron and an electron, known as positronium, could account for the anisotropy of biological molecules. Sir Harrie Massey, a pure physicist, investigating fundamental particles of matter, for most people an ivory tower occupation, has contributed to the understanding of a property of all living substances which has defied explanation till now—an extraordinary illustration of the ultimate usefulness of all knowledge of nature.

On occasions such as this, I am fond of quoting some words of Benjamin Franklin, as paraphrased by Sir Henry Dale: "I swear diligently to seek the truth, and having found it, to impart it to others." All those who receive degrees today, our special visitor and orator, Lord Todd, and the many other distinguished visiting scholars and men of science, have clearly subscribed to this oath, which summarises the duties of every member of the academic body of a University, to add to knowledge and to teach.

Today, we are scrutinising anxiously many aspects of our civilisation, of our uses of knowledge. What is certain is that only still more knowledge will provide the answers to our dilemma. The University of Adelaide will continue to play an important part in the search for solutions to these problems of a prosperous society.

Eight Centenary Visiting Professors were then admitted to degrees ad eundem gradum as follows:

- Miss Elizabeth Jane Sweeting, M.A. (London and Oxford)—M.A.
 Professor Philip Malcolm Waller Thody, M.A. (London)—M.A.
 Professor John Ernest Vaizey, M.A. (Cambridge and Oxford), D.Tech. (Brunel)—D.Litt.
 Professor Michael Young, B.Sc. (Econ.), Ph.D. (London), Hon.
 M.A. (Cambridge), Hon. D.Litt. (Sheffield), Hon. D.Univ.
 (Open University)—D.Litt.
 Professor Barry Shelley Brook, B.S.S. (City College, New York),
 M.A. (Columbia), D. de l'Univ. (Sorbonne)—Ph.D.
 Dr. Geoffrey Ainsworth Harrison, M.A., D.Phil. (Oxford)—Ph.D.
 Professor Frederick Kenneth Hare, B.Sc. (London), Ph.D. (Montreal), Hon. D.Sc. (McGill), Hon. LL.D. (Queens and Western Ontario)—D.Sc.
 Professor Sir Harrie Stewart Wilson Massey, Kt., B.A., M.Sc.
 (Melbourne), Ph.D. (Cambridge), Hon. D.Sc. (Belfast, Hull, Leicester and Western Ontario), Hon. LL.D. (Glasgow and Melbourne), F.R.S.—D.Sc.

Miss Elizabeth Jane Sweeting, on behalf of the new graduates, then addressed the Congregation as follows:

Deputy Chancellor, Your Excellency, Vice-Chancellor, members of the Council and Senate of the University of Adelaide, ladies and gentlemen:

It will not have escaped your notice that I am the only woman among those you have chosen to honour today. I hasten to say that I am not an exponent or special advocate of Women's Lib, so it is with diffidence that I speak on behalf of us all. Even the most dedicated of Women's Lib supporters would have to admit that my fellow honorands, though male, are undeniably more distinguished. But I shall take heart from a woman I admire, Baroness Stocks, sometime Principal of Westfield College, London University, who writes in her Commonplace Book:

My opportunities have always exceeded my abilities, my good fortune has always exceeded my deserts.

Reflecting on this occasion when so many have come so far to take part in your Centenary Celebrations, I followed one of the more fanciful exchanges of letters in our newspapers which appear when the columns are not taken up with more weighty matters. The subject of this series was "Which university is at the heart of things?" Not surprisingly, there was a letter which said that "if you draw a line from Newcastle as the most northerly, to Southampton the southerly, with Exeter as the Western outpost and East Anglia the Eastern marches, the lines between north and south hinge on Oxford University (precisely at Balliol, of course)".

A writer from Bradford took Aberdeen from the hands of the oil barons as the most northerly, and Coleraine as the most westerly, so that the lines hinged on Bradford University. I do not propose to go into geographical acrobatics here and now. I will simply say that for this great occasion the lines hinge on Adelaide. In the visitors you honour today, the lines stretch from Brunel, London, Leeds, New York, Oxford and Toronto.

They are not just lines on the air-line maps so familiar to jet-lagged travellers, but living means of communication stretching into your university, your staff, your students, your city and your country. I hope that there will be communication among ourselves too—I, for instance, have had to come to Adelaide to meet a colleague from Oxford, where our paths had not crossed.

I have made it sound as if there were one-way traffic only, flowing in Adelaide's direction. You are indeed increasingly sought out, but you also send out far and wide the talented people you have trained here on your busy and ever-growing campus.

In particular, we have already met and talked with many of the overseas students who will be returning to work and live in their own countries. They will return, not only with the knowledge and the degrees they have acquired here, but with the understanding of ways of life and of attitudes other than their own, both of Australia and of many other countries and other disciplines.

Your Visiting Professors can be here, unfortunately, only for a much shorter time, but we too will return greatly enriched by the contacts we have made. Our friendship with you will be permanent, and through us, as through the multitude who work and visit here with like mind, channels of communication have been established.

So many unhappy situations, domestic, national and international, are ascribed to lack of communication, that any contribution to a network of understanding must be of the greatest importance. A good start is made by individuals talking together in a congenial environment such as you have provided for us on this Centenary occasion.

Perhaps it comes naturally to me to speak in terms of communication, because that is the essential quality of the theatre and indeed of the arts, as well as of the universities. It is particularly fitting in a city which can boast a most striking and distinguished arts complex still in process of coming to life, and in a university where fine provision is also made for the study and practice of the arts. These must surely be symbols of the importance you attach to communication. Our presence here indicates the further opportunities you have made possible for the full exchange of ideas and information in the arts, the sciences, the study of the world around us and of the variety of the life we lead.

We must, as E. M. Forster says, behave as if we are immortal and as if civilisation is eternal. He goes on, "Both statements are false; both of them must be assumed to be true if we are to go on eating and working and travelling, and keep open a few breathing holes for the human spirit." This is perhaps largely why we are all here to celebrate the Centenary of the University of Adelaide.

Your honorands are grateful, and we wish you well.

W. MEIKLEJOHN, Bursar.

We report that we have duly audited the various Books of Account and other records relating to the Income and Expenditure of The University of Adelaide, in respect of the year which ended on the 31st day of December, 1973, and do certify the above statement to be a correct abstract of such Income and Expenditure during the period named.

We further certify that in terms of sections 3 and 7 of the States Grants (Universities) Act, 1972-1973 in relation to the year 1973, the above financial statement correctly sets out the Fees and State Grants received by The University of Adelaide, that the Commonwealth Grant for recurrent purposes paid to the University in that year has been applied for expenditure (other than for the purposes of land, buildings and equipment expenditure as defined in the Act) on University purposes and that the grant of $196,000 (of which the Commonwealth and State each contributed $98,000) has been applied for expenditure on special research purposes.

The University of Adelaide.

W. MEIKLEJOHN,
Bursar.

We report that we have duly audited the above statement relating to the Income and Expenditure of the Separate Accounts of The University of Adelaide in respect of the year which ended on the 31st day of December, 1973, and do certify the above statement to be a correct abstract of such Income and Expenditure during the period named.

YARWOOD VANE & CO., Chartered Accountants.
SPRY WALKER & CO., Chartered Accountants.

Adelaide, 16 April, 1974.

THE SENATE

Until 29 April, 1971 the Senate of the University consisted of all graduates admitted to a degree of Master or Doctor and of all other graduates of the University of three years' standing. A graduate of another University admitted to a degree in The University of Adelaide reckoned his standing from the date of his graduation in such other University.

On 29 April, 1971 a new act, "The University of Adelaide Act, 1971" came into force. Under it, the Senate consists of all graduates of the University; all persons in the full-time employment of the University who are graduates of other Universities recognised by the University or who have attained at other institutions of higher learning qualifications considered by the University to be of a status equivalent to that of a degree of the University; and all postgraduate students.

PAST AND PRESENT GRADUATES
