and they looked for an extension of these relations during a conference which it was hoped would be held during the meetings of the Scientific Association. (Cheers.)

The Rev. F. Slaney Poole, M.A. (preliminary examiner), submitted "Pharmaceutical education." No one would deny the necessity for the examinations. Any one who wanted to enter a protected profession should be prepared to attain a certain amount of culture. In these days of tinctures and tabloids sufficient attention could not be paid to the rudiments of pharmaceutical study. He traced the history of the gradual development of the educated chemist. They were, he said, all tied together in the bundle of life. They were all servants of the public, and those who occupied privileged places, occupied them not only that they might be guarded and defended and kept up to the mark, they had those privileges in order that they might be of greater services to those of their brethren who were outside. (Cheers.) They were called upon to fit themselves by the process of pharmaceutical education in the best possible way for the important places that they filled. A man's education did not finish with his examination, but should continue to the final limit of life. It was after the examination that his real education began, and any society that wished to be respected must make itself and show itself worthy of respect. One way to that was by fitting themselves, as best they might, to that lot to which they were appointed, and by discharging its duties with the utmost fidelity, with perfect honesty, and with the confidence which had its assurance in tried and experienced efficiency. (Cheers.)

Mr. C. R. Hodge (registrar of the University) responded. He pointed out that the theoretical education which the students were obtaining at the University and students with theoretical knowledge were all the better able to put to the best use their subsequent practical training. The connection with the University had been of inestimable benefit. The time was near when they might consider the question the issuing of a diploma of pharmacy with the University imprimatur upon it. (Cheers.) The forward movement of recent years would then be consolidated.

Dr. Lendon, in proposing "The Pharmaceutical Society," indulged in interesting personal reminiscences. He said one aim of the society was to benefit its members; another was to benefit the public by improving the art of pharmacy. It must therefore meet with their approval and their sympathy. (Cheers.)

The President expressed his pleasure at the large attendance. The society had elected a formulary committee, and they were in communication with the societies in the other States, and one result would probably be the issue of a pharmacopoeia which would be of service to them and the medical profession. South Australia had taken a lead in instituting reciprocal interstate relations, and they expected Western Australia to join them next year. (Cheers.)

At the instance of Mr. A. K. Newbery "The medical profession" was honoured, and Dr. Hone acknowledged the compliment.

"Wm. L. Baker," North Adelaide, remarks:—"I have heard a good deal of music of one kind and another in many countries, and I think my training has rendered me able to stand a lot, but I can safely say that I never heard such an execrably hideous series of sounds as to make up Cesar Franck's Quintet in F minor, which was included in the programme of the Conservatorium concert last Monday evening. Although the performance was in every respect excellent, nothing could make the composition bearable to the listener, for it contains neither melody nor harmony; and it must be confessed that when discord is prolonged uninterruptedly for more than forty minutes it gets rather wearing to the nerves. The modulations (or rather, lack of modulations), are absolutely bloodcurdling; and, in short, all the laws of musical decency are ignored, and cacophony runs riot. It was positive torture to listen to it! The great aim of composers of this class of work appears to be to eradicate beauty of any sort, and to foster extravagantly dull ugliness, and it is to me a matter of the deepest mystery how such diabolical productions can be even tolerated, much less encouraged!"

CONSERVATORIUM CONCERT.

The University choral and orchestral classes, under the direction of Mr. F. Bevan, on Tuesday evening at the Elder Hall repeated "The First Walpurgis Night" (Mendelssohn) and "The banner of St. George" (Elgar), given so successfully a few weeks ago. The production was similar in character to the earlier performance. The orchestral and choral parts were admirably rendered, and the soloists did their work satisfactorily. Miss Ethel Redings took the soprano portions of the "Walpurgis Night," Miss Elsie Riggs had the contralto, and Mr. Max. Fotheringham the baritone. In "The banner of St. George" Mrs. A. E. Hawkins was again entrusted with the soprano solo parts. Mr. A. Williamson presided at the organ, and Mr. Bevan conducted.

THE PRIMARY EXAMINATION.

About four weeks ago nearly 800 boys and girls, ranging from 11 or 12 years old up to 15 or 16, went through the ordeal of the University primary examination. For English and arithmetic the number of candidates was so large that the big hall of the Jubilee Exhibition Building had to be utilized, but for most of the other subjects the space available in the Elder Conservatorium sufficed. Some of the papers taxed the children severely, and as the arithmetic—which is a compulsory subject—was specially difficult, a large percentage of failures is looked for. The anxiety of those who went up for the examination is likely to continue for some time longer, as enquiry at the University on Monday elicited the information that the results are not likely to be published until the end of next week at the earliest.
