

A Case study: how new comers become experienced learners through interactions in an English as a Second Language classroom community

A dissertation submitted in partial fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of Master of Arts (Applied Linguistics)

by

Akiko Nagao

Supervisor: Dr Peter Mickan

School of Humanities

University of Adelaide

June 2008

Contents

Declaration	v
Acknowledgments	vi
List of figures	vii
Abstract	viii
1 Introduction	1
1.1 Rationale	1
1.1.1 Learning English in Japan	1
1.1.2 Learning English in Australia	2
1.2 Background to this study	3
1.3 Hypothesis	4
1.4 The research	5
1.4.1 Aims	5
1.4.2 Objectives	5
1.4.3 Research questions	6
1.5 Limitations	6
1.6 Structure	7
2 Literature review	8
2.1 Human activities in communities of practice	8
2.2 Participation in communities of practice	9
2.2.1 Peripheral, active and core groups in communities of practice	10
2.2.2 Newcomers and experienced learners in a community	12
2.2.3 Communities of practice in the classroom	14
2.3 Social practices	16
2.3.1 Classroom social practices	18
2.3.2 Peer-to-peer interactions	18
2.3.3 Interactions in social practices	20
3 Methodology	23
3.1. Research approach	23
3.2 Research site	25
3.3. The subject	26
3.3.1 Aim of studying English in Australia	26
3.3.2 Learning English in GEAP	26

	3.3.3 Learning English outside the classroom	26
	3.3.4 Educational background	27
	3.4 The classroom	28
	3.5 Data collection	28
	3.5.1 Duration of observations	28
	3.5.2 Interviews	29
	3.5.3 Self-reflection	30
	3.6 Data analysis	31
4	Analysis and interpretation (1)	32
	4.1 New findings in communities of practice	32
	4.2 Hypothesising on learners' development	35
	4.2.1 Self-reflections and self-awareness	37
	4.2.1.1 The first experience of writing an argument essay	37
	4.2.1.2 Awareness and motivation	39
	4.2.1.3 Social practices in reading tasks	40
	4.2.1.4 Social practices: seeking external help	41
	4.2.1.5 Proofreaders	42
	4.2.1.6 Peer discussions	43
	4.2.1.7 J1's social practices in the classroom	46
	4.2.1.8. Recontextualisation	47
5	Analysis and interpretation (2)	50
	5.1 Classroom discourse analysis	50
	5.1.1 progressive and punctuative messages	51
	5.1.2 Peer interaction patterns: co-participation	53
	5.1.3 Using Rhetorical Unit analysis: newcomers and experienced learners	58
6	Conclusion	67
	6.1 Learning through participation in social practices	67
	6.1.1 Communities of practice in the ESL classroom	68
	6.1.2 Learning stages experienced by newcomers	70
	6.1.3 How new comers become experienced learners	71
	6.2 Implication for language learning and teaching	72
	6.2.1 Roles of the classroom and the learners and teachers	72
	6.3 Directions for future research	73
	6.4 Conclusion	74

References	76
Appendices	82
Appendix A: Consent Form	82
Appendix B: J1's plan for the argument essay writing	83
Appendix C: Transcript Notation	86
Appendix D: Text One and Text Two: An analysis of progressive and punctuative messages	87
Appendix E: Transcript 1, Transcript 2, Transcript 3	102
Appendix F: Text 3 Rhetorical Units Analysis for Chapter 4	126

Declaration

This thesis contains no material which has been accepted for the award of any other degree or diploma in any university or other tertiary institution and, to the best of my knowledge and belief, contains no material previously published or written by another person, except where due reference has been made in the text.

I give consent to this copy of my thesis, when deposited in the University Library, being available for photocopying and loan.

SIGNED: _____Akiko NAGAO_____

Acknowledgments

My utmost gratitude and respect go to Dr. Peter Mickan for his scholarly, trustworthy, candid supervision and encouragements. Without his academic support, commitment and comments, it would not have been possible to bring this thesis into being.

I would also like to give special recognition to Ms. Naoka Yoshimoto for her generosity in supporting this study and providing me with the insight and understanding regarding language learning in a classroom community. Likewise, I am grateful to friends and colleagues, in particular, Ms. Michelle Gray, Ms. Jonghee Lee, and Ms. Judith Timoney for proofreading the thesis and for their generously in sharing their knowledge and insights during the project, and Guglielmo Plain for his indefatigable support through this study. Particular thanks go to the students and teachers who participated in the GEAP course and generously gave their permission so that I could undertake this study.

Finally, my most heartfelt thanks also go to my mother, father, sister, Professor William Plain and Ms. Renata Plain for their confidence, understanding and support, which made my personal academic pursuit not just a dream.

List of figures

Figure 1	Wenger's degree of community participation	11
Figure 2	Social practices in communities of practice	16
Figure 3	Wenger's degrees of community participation	32
Figure 4	Task sheet for the unit of work: writing an argument essay.	38
Figure 5	J1's progressive and punctuative messages in each text	52
Figure 6	J1's plan for writing an argument essay	54
Figure 7	Cloran's Rhetorical Units	59
Figure 8	Summary of Text Three	59
Figure 9	GEAP 5A' as a community of practice	69
Figure 10	A participant's degree of participation in social practices in an ESL classroom	70

List of tables

Table 1	J1's progressive and punctuative messages	52
Table 2	Number of exchanged messages in Text Three	64
Table 3	Rhetorical Units used by a new student, J1, and student M in Text Three	65

Abstract

This thesis is a case study of language learning in the ESL classroom context as demonstrated in Lave and Wenger's communities of practice (1991). The aim of this study is to examine the effectiveness or otherwise of English language learning as applied in an ESL classroom community. More specifically, the thesis examines the learning experiences of an international student learning a second language while being exposed to a variety of social practices as a newcomer and participant attempting to understand the role of participation in an English learning classroom community and also theories through spoken dialogue. This approach involves interpreting the students' learning in social participation as community members, in which natural human activities influence the students' language learning.

The theoretical framework for this examination is offered by the sociocultural resources of learning in a community, as developed by Lave and Wenger (1991). Three hypotheses and three research questions guide the analysis. Firstly, that Lave and Wenger's concept of communities of practice can be applied into a formal organisation such as an ESL classroom learning community. Secondly, that it is possible to identify stage-by-stage processes for ESL newcomers to become experienced learners in a long term process by analysing social practices in a classroom. And thirdly, that Lave and Wenger's idea of core, active, and peripheral participants can apply in an ESL classroom. Research questions were used to analyse an individual ESL learner's participation in small groups as well as within the whole classroom community.

The analysis examined the participant's first self-reflection on her language learning in order to identify how she became accustomed to a variety of social practices by interacting with community members, people from outside of the community. Classroom discourse was analysed to explore how newcomers and experienced learners participate in peer discussions in a small community.

The findings demonstrate the English learning classroom as a community. People learn languages by interacting with other people and making a community. The process of community building and participation is a natural process which people do every day. The above idea indicates the importance of how learners learn language in a classroom community through exposure to natural human activities.