Seventy-four Next Week Mitchell, who charges the bribery against certain police officers, will be 74 years of age on Tuesday. He has a long record of distinguished service in the interests of South Australia and they were in partnership with the best minds of past ages. It might be, however, a melancholy inspiration, as so far the best minds had not made history in that respect. That had been proved to each generation by bloodshed and ruin. The war between Britain and France, under Napoleon, was similar in many respects to the last war. Europe was defending itself against a military despotism. After the war had arisen problems almost identical with those of the present day, and there had been an attempt to organize peace. Although England at that time had been ruled by aristocrats and desnots, they had made a generous peace. The passions of war were forgotten more quickly than by modern democracies. France was admitted to the Confederation of Europe, which was the League of Nations of that day, within three years. Germany was still outside the League of Nations, although it was nearly eight years since the war ended.

Nations Union. It was inspiration, he continued, for

people had done better than had those of the present day, who began worse, but who would finish better. "We should not be too proud to learn from them," he said. "for, after all, they managed to keep general peace for more than 30 years. They failed because they had no permanent organization, no public support, and their efforts to keep peace were tied up with their efforts to keep the boundaries and Vardon Memorial Church. The principal problems before the League to-day, said Professor Hancock, were the tightening of its organization to prevent war, and at the same time to make possible the modification of the existing position. Those objects could be materially nided by the cuthusiasm of the Unions of the League, by the patience which was the fruit of knowledge, and by the knowledge which was the fruit of
