

17th April, 1947.

My dear Henry,

You have so often kindly pressed me to accept your invitations in Oxford, that I quite forget whether you are expecting me for the night of Monday April 21, after the Genetical Society meeting that day. If you are not expecting me, please do not allow this letter to influence your arrangements as I could perfectly well return to London and Cambridge that evening. It would, however, be most enjoyable if you could put me up, and I should hate to miss the opportunity if, as seems possible, you have suggested it to me.
