

November 15th 1943.

My dear Ron,

Thank you for such a happy week-end and all our pleasure together. I enjoyed it - saw so much and feel stimulated and encouraged. It was delightful to be able to see you in Cambridge. You made me feel so comfortable, and to have a room in College, and so near you was a perfect arrangement.

I am immensely interested in the mouse programmes; they represent, moreover, such a remarkable new method in Genetics. You know this. I shall follow the book in all stages with the utmost satisfaction.

I was very glad indeed to see all the American material: it is rather wonderful to have got it. I do hope that the dog difficulties may be satisfactorily resolved in the end.

I will keep the material that I promised for the Darwin Gallery (your own polydeoxy preparations, and the notes illustrating the selection work that you are so kind as to want) until you are ready for it. Just let me know when the time comes.

Thank you so much for it all.

Ever yours,

Henry
