

February 2nd 1956.

My dear Ron,

What a delightful plan: it is really exceedingly kind of you, and I shall look forward so much to my visit. It is of course a charming idea to go on with you to the R.S. dinner - but you are really too hospitable.

Right then, I will do as you suggest. I will come to you on Tuesday next week (9th), reaching Cambridge at 5:20, if that suits you (I must get in a morning's work at Oxford that day). It will be delightful to stay that night and next, so giving us all the Wednesday and most of the Thursday together in Cambridge. I will then travel to London with you for the R.S. dinner.

I take it I can leave the R.S. dinner in time to catch the 9:50 p.m. train for Oxford on the Thursday night. (The midnight train is out of the question, and I must get back to Oxford (that night).

How kind of you to think of such a delightful place: I look forward so much to seeing you.

Yours ever,
Henry
