

17 July 1945

My dear Professor Fréchet,

I have your ~~kind~~ kind letter of July 6th, telling me to expect, in all probability, an invitation from the Institut de Statistique to lecture during the same period when I shall be visiting Paris, on some such subject as Statistical Methods in Genetical Problems.

It will be a pleasure to me to attempt this duty also, provided doing so does not interfere with the program which you are fixing for the Institut Poincaré. There^{be} will also, I hope, be opportunities to see at that time of year some of the beautiful places in and around Paris. It is only seldom and briefly that

I have before visited your capital.

Thanking you again,

I remain,

Yours sincerely,
