My dear Oscar,

If you have page proofs in sight I should be glad if, after correction, copies could be sent to Welch, Pearson, and Bartlett, <sup>with a copy to</sup> certainly Bartlett, for I take it his backing was essential to give Pearson and Welch confidence that they really were on a good thing.

I suppose the procedure you follow is to allow controversial discussion in the issue following that of the act of provocation, and to invite the original author to comment, <sup>on his critics</sup> if he so wishes, in this second number. I imagine that such comments from me needed on this occasion can be very brief.

Sincerely yours,
