

18th. November 1948.

My dear Gerard,

As I expect you remember I found a good deal of difficulty in following Hutcheon's first effort to expound his experiments on the inheritance of resistance to infection. I should certainly like to see his paper published, as he has evidently made progress with an exceedingly difficult problem. If it is ready now I will send it on at once to Darlington for him to consider whether it should be shortened, or in what other ways the value of the work could be made more manifest.

I see there is a Royal Society Dining Club dinner on December 16th. Let me know if there is any chance of your coming as my guest on that occasion.

Yours sincerely,
